Value of the Pound Drops Below $2 for First Time

By PETER T. KILBORN
Special to The New York Times

LONDON, March 5 — The British pound, once the pillar of the world's economy, fell below $2 for the first time today. For the last six months, the pound had come close to falling through the psychological barrier. Today, it closed at $1.975.

For the pound, like the Empire and even the British lion, now a bruised and bandaged caricature in the press here, it was a humiliating if largely symbolic fall. Just after World War II the market value of the pound was about $4.

The drop in value came, according to the men who buy and sell currencies, because the Bank of England, protector of the country's financial stability decided that the country would be better off with a shrunken pound.

The recent pressure on the pound is wrapped in the stubborn maladies of the British economy, particularly inflation that exceeds other major countries' levels, a continuing although improving deficit in British trade, and borrowing undertaken to carry Britain's debts.

Although inflation is now running at perhaps half the 30 percent heights it touched last year, it is still much higher than the levels of Britain's major trading partners. When that happens, a country's currency usually has to give.

The pound's weakness is also

U.S. TO URGE PACT IN U.N. TO COMBAT CORPORATE BRIBES

Promise Is Made to Identify Eventually Those Officials Paid Off by Lockheed

By United Press International

WASHINGTON, March 5—The United States today proposed an international pact to to combat corporate bribery and promised to answer eventually those governments seeking the identities of officials bribed by Lockheed Aircraft Corporation.

But Deputy Secretary of State Robert S. Ingersoll, who announced the initiatives, said that the disclosure process would take time and that the Government would not tell Japan and the Netherlands for at least six months which officials were involved in Lockheed bribery charges.

Mr. Ingersoll unveiled the two-part antibribery proposal unexpectedly in testimony before a joint economic subcommittee of Congress, saying the charges of widespread overseas payoffs by Lockheed and other companies had done "grievous damage" to United States foreign relations.

[Tokyo police yesterday questioned the Rev. Hose Aramiya, a Spanish-born Roman Catholic priest who is a naturalized Japanese citizen, about his alleged role as a conduit for secret Lockheed funds coming into Japan. Page 37.]

Mr. Ingersoll added that the United States would propose a United Nations agreement policing corrupt business practices and that it was also developing procedures for giving foreign countries the information they needed to prosecute officials accused of accepting United States corporate bribes.

Under questioning by committee members, however, Mr. Ingersoll conceded it would take years to develop the information exchange.

Those names of Japanese and Dutch officials involved in the Lockheed scandal, he said, would be passed along only after United States law-enforcement agencies completed their own investigations and Lockheed made further disclosures.

"That could take another six

RUSSIANS' DEFICIT IN TRADE WIDENS

West Sending Them More Machinery as Its Demand for Soviet Goods Falls

By THEODORE SHABAD

The first Soviet trade figures for 1975 acknowledge that Moscow's trade deficit with the West deepened last year as reduced demand for Soviet goods in the recession combined with a surge in Western shipments of modern machinery.

The data, published in the January issue of the Soviet Union's Foreign Trade magazine shows a balance-of-trade deficit of $2.4 billion in the first six months of 1975 with nations outside the Soviet bloc. This seems to conform with Western estimates of a nearly $5 billion deficit for all of 1975.

The large hard-currency trade deficit, which Moscow has covered by borrowing from Western banks and by gold sales, is expected to continue in 1976 in view of continuing imports of modern technology and the large grain purchases that followed a disastrous 1975 grain crop.

A speech by Prime Minister Aleksei N. Kosygin this week suggested that the adverse trade balance was becoming a matter of concern in Moscow and that the leadership was seeking ways of improving export performance.

Expansion Planned

Addressing the Soviet Communist Party's 25th Congress on the new five-year plan of 1976-80, Mr. Kosygin said the Soviet Union was determined to expand its export potential both in its traditional products, mostly raw materials, and in new types of goods.

"Since foreign trade has now become an important sector of our economy," the Prime Minister declared, "we will have to consider the development in some cases of special-purpose export-oriented industries that would meet specific needs of the world market."

Mr. Kosygin did not specify

Soviet Agriculture Chief Is Ousted From Politburo

By CHRISTOPHER S. WREN
Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, March 5 — The Soviet Minister of Agriculture was abruptly dropped from the ruling Politburo today apparently as punishment for the disastrous grain failure last year.

At the same time Leonid I. Brezhnev, riding a new crest of prestige in his leadership career, was formally reappointed as secretary general to head the Communist Party.

The name of the Minister of Agriculture, Dmitri S. Polyansky, was conspicuously absent from the list of the newly elected Politburo members that Mr. Brezhnev read to the nearly 5,000 delegates assembled for the closing session of the 25th Communist Party Congress.

Mr. Polyansky's future had become a subject of speculation after a drought last summer left a grain harvest of only 140 million tons, more than a third below the goal. But it was widely doubted he would be made a scapegoat because such a move would draw attention to the extent of the harvest failure and thus call Mr. Brezhnev's basic agricultural policy into question.

However, the Ministry of Agriculture was subjected at the congress to harsh criticism, aimed at showing that the carrying out of the policy was at fault rather than the policy itself.

Fyodor D. Kulakov, the party secretary for agriculture, has not been disciplined.

Cancer Death Rate Grew Sharply in Last Two Years

By HAROLD M. SCHMECK Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 5 — Government experts on health statistics now estimate that the United States death rate from cancer rose more sharply last year than in any previous year since World War II.

The new estimate, based on more complete figures, is for an increase less dramatic than one indicated by early figures available late last year and then somewhat discounted. But the situation is highly unusual, and is made even more so by the fact that the 1974 increase in cancer death rate was also abnormally large.

No one knows what these rises mean or how long the trend will continue, if at all. Specialists are intensely interested in such figures, however, because the large majority of human cancers are believed to depend on environmental factors. Changes in the death rate could be viewed as a case in which nature is trying to tell the human race something for its own good.

Complete figures for 1975 are not yet available, but specialists at the National Center for Health Statistics estimate that the rise in the death rate from 1974 to 1975 will be 2 to 3 percent, and perhaps even slightly above 3 percent. The provisional figure for the year through November was 3.2 percent, but this rate of increase is expected to drop somewhat when the full year's figures are

TOTAL EMPLOYED ROSE IN FEBRUARY TO JULY 1974 PEAK

Jobless Rate Fell to 7.6% From 7.8% in January, 4th Monthly Decline

PRESIDENT ENCOURAGED

But Advances in Key Areas Are Termed by U. S. as Comparatively Slight

By EDWARD COWAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 5 — The Labor Department reported today that the employment situation continued to improve in February, but that the advances in the broad categories of jobholding and unemployment, were slight.

The national unemployment rate eased to 7.6 percent from 7.8 percent in January. This seasonally adjusted figure meant that for every 924 persons employed in February 76 were out of work and looking for a job.

It was the fourth consecutive monthly decline in the jobless rate, producing a total drop of 1 percent since the 8.6 percent rate of last October. January's decrease of 0.5 percent, from 8.3 percent to 7.8, was the biggest since late 1959.

Peak Was in May 1975

The peak unemployment rate for the recent recession, as well as for the entire period since World War II, was 9.2 percent in May 1975.

Total employment last month crept up slightly, after a strong surge in January, rising by 125,000 to its July 1974 pre-recession peak of 86.3 million. The number of unemployed as calculated by the Government's monthly sample survey of households dropped slightly, by 154,000, to 7,136,00. This, like the jobholding figure, was seasonally adjusted.

Technicians at the Labor Department said that they had used "low-key" language in the monthly report "because the changes are small."

President Ford, campaigning in Illinois, called the figures "extremely encouraging" and said "they show the trend that we've been predicting." The

BAILEY CHARGES BID TO 'FIX' CASE

Clashes With Government Witness in Hearst Trial

By WALLACE TURRNER
Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, March 5—Patricia Hearst's chief defense lawyer, F. Lee Bailey, roared at a Government witness today, "Did you go and try to fix this case behind my back?"

The witness, Dr. Joel Fort, a medical consultant for the prosecution at the trial of Miss Hearst for armed bank robbery, denied trying to "fix" the case.

The cross-examination later became so heated that Federal District Judge Oliver J. Carter intervened. That exchange, which stemmed from Dr. Fort's statements about his communications with the defendant's parents, went this way:

Q. That's absolutely false Dr. Fort.

A. No. You're lying about it Mr. Bailey.

THE COURT: Now gentlemen, this is not the place to start calling one another liars; and, that's just what you are doing. Now stop it.

This came before Dr. Fort was blocked, perhaps only temporarily, from giving his opinion as to whether Miss

8 on L.I. Accused of G.O.P. Kickbacks

By ROY R. SILVER
Special to The New York Times

MINEOLA, L.I., March 5—Federal and Nassau County grand juries investigating allegations of 1 percent kickbacks to the Nassau Republican Party returned a total of nine indictments today against the administrative assistant to the Nassau Republican chairman and seven present or former officials of the Town of Hempstead.

The Federal indictments charge 48-year-old Donald Woolnough of Uniondale, L.I., the administrative assistant to Assemblyman Joseph M. Margiotta, who is chairman of both the Nassau County Republican Committee and the Town of Hempstead Republican Committee, with one count of perjury.

The Federal indictments, announced by David G. Trager, United States Attorney for the Eastern District, named others on similar one-count perjury charges. They were the following:

William D. Phears, 58 years old, of Uniondale, L.I., former Water Commissioner of the town.

Raymond Graber, 55, of West Hempstead, deputy commissioner of the town's Conservation and Waterways Department.

August V. Cosenza, 36, of Levittown, L.I., assistant sanitation supervisor of the town.

They were charged with having falsely testified before a special Federal grand jury investigating allegations of 1 percent kickbacks of their salaries whereby town and Nassau County employees were coerced to make the payments to the county Republican Party to obtain overtime, promotions or other considerations.

Denis E. Dillon, the Nassau County District Attorney, who had been coordinating his investigation with that of the Federal authorities, said five

City Is Acting on Charges Of Bronx Market Bribery

By JOHN L. HESS

The city's Department of Investigation said yesterday that it had received allegations of bribery in the leasing of the Bronx Terminal Market to the Arol Development Corporation.

It asserted also that the city's former Economic Development Administrator, Ken Patton, had signed the lease over the opposition of his agency's counsel, whose warnings were ultimately verified.

The statements were made by Nicholas Scoppetta, the Commissioner of Investigation, in an affidavit opposing a motion by Arol in State Supreme Court in Manhattan to quash his subpoena of its records. It included the first official suggestions of criminal conduct in the Bronx leases now under inquiry by a number of agencies.

Mr. Scoppetta said his office was "acting upon an allegation that the lease of the Bronx Terminal Market and certain features of the lease of Yankee Stadium came about as the result of certain improper or illegal payments to which petitioner [Arol] was a party."

The lawyer for Arol in the transaction was Patrick J. Cunningham, the Democratic party leader, who soon after the transaction became counsel and then chief executive of the Yankees.

Steven H. Thal, Arol's lawyer in the subpoena battle, said yesterday that "it's all lies." He declined to discuss the al-

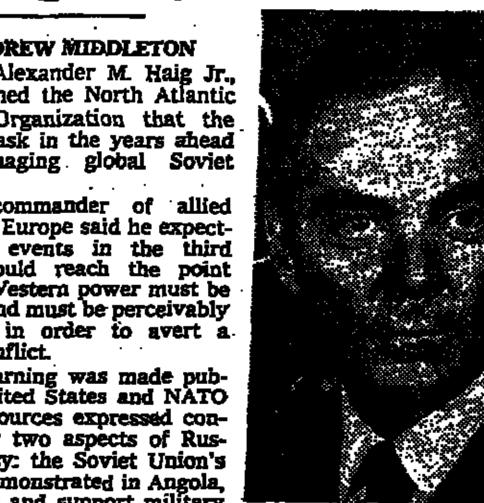
Haig Says NATO Must Deal With Soviet Expansion

By DREW MIDDLETON

Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr., has warned the North Atlantic Treaty Organization that the West's task in the years ahead "is managing global Soviet power."

The commander of allied forces in Europe said he expected that events in the third world could reach the point where "Western power must be applied and must be perceivably applied" in order to avert a larger conflict.

The warning was made public as United States and NATO defense sources expressed concern over two aspects of Russian policy: the Soviet Union's ability, demonstrated in Angola, to project and support military operations at long range and the increase of Soviet forces in East Germany, estimated by General Haig at 100,000 men.



NATO
Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr.

General Haig's views on the West's military policy were made known in an interview broadcast by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's program "As It Happens."

Global Concern

Asked about suggestions that NATO should assume some responsibility in the South Atlantic after the demonstration of Soviet influence in Angola, the general said that although he did not expect any expansion of NATO's interests "at the moment" he had been encouraged by the North Atlantic Council's discussions of "global matters."

The "important objective," he said, is to develop a Western consensus and "hopefully to achieve some corrective action and policies with respect to these global events."

Détente, the general said, has been the product of Western strength but it "can never be a substitute" for that strength. Debates over détente were termed "far less relevant" than an understanding by the West that it is "confronted" with "a global Soviet military capability" that "must be managed through the combining of the resources of the Western world."

Commenting about the effect on European allies of events in the United States after Vietnam, the Supreme Commander said: "To the degree that the United States is perceived as unreliable or hibernated, it's understandable that West Europeans should grope for some other framework, some other structure to provide what they perceive to be their essential security needs."

But the strategic situation is so foreboding, he added, that the West cannot indulge in competitive arrangements but needs "the collective resources of the entire Atlantic community to meet this growing global Soviet threat."

General Haig gave a detailed picture of the growth of Soviet ground, air and naval forces in the NATO area. According to United States, British and West German sources, Soviet military manpower in East Germany has risen from 250,000 to 350,000 men, possibly more, in the last five years.

This expansion of the most modern Soviet field army has been accompanied by what a British expert, John Erickson, professor of defense studies at Edinburgh University, recently called a "near frantic rate of military production" suggesting "something akin to a war tempo."

American and European analysts speculating on the reasons for the sharp rise in Soviet military strength in Europe say that the Russians are seeking to raise their conventional striking power to the point that an invasion of Western Europe could be at such a pace and in such depth that the West's use of tactical nuclear weapons in response would come too late.

The trend in the growth of Soviet forces, General Haig said, is of "the utmost concern" because "to the degree we experience inadequate conventional military capabilities we then find ourselves lowering the so-called nucear threshold, which raises the risk of our reliance on nuclear weapons to defend our interests."

The balance in tactical nuclear weapons in Europe remains "favorable" to the West both in quality and quantity, the general said, but he emphasized the "highly dynamic" Soviet modernization program. An increase in the density of the Russian ground-based rocket capability, rockets whose launchers may become mobile, has amounted to a "dramatic increase" in the Soviet nuclear might.

He said that this has been accompanied by a "steady and relentless shift" in the character of the Soviet tactical air arm from air defense to strike missions, including the deployment of a new fighter-bomber, the Su-19. In recent months, General Haig said, the Soviet Air Force has become "increasingly offensive in character" as the result of improvements in range and local capability.

Soviet Superiority Cited

The NATO commander's assessment of conventional-force balances was that the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies have a two-to-one superiority in ground forces and in the air and "almost four to one in tanks alone."

While the increase in Soviet strength one the central fronts was put at 100,000 men by General Haig, Professor Erickson and other European analysts estimated that the Russians had added 120,000 men and that the strength of the 20 Soviet divisions that make up the expert Group of Soviet Forces in Germany was now approximately 370,000 men, including artillery, engineers, transport and other forces supporting the divisions.

United States Government sources report that the strength of Soviet motorized rifle divisions has risen to 12,500 from 11,000, and that of armored divisions to 10,000 from 9,000.

General Haig cited an increase "in the density of modern armored tanks, mobile artillery, armored personnel carriers" and the combat support structure suggesting "at least an increased consideration on the part of the Soviet leaders for the so-called conventional phase."

Professor Erickson, in his more detailed estimates, recently published in London, reported that the number of main battle tanks in a Soviet motorized rifle division had risen to 266 from 188, and that the program has added 60 artillery pieces to a rifle division and 35 to an armored division.

He adds that at present strengths, 19,000 Warsaw Pact tanks face approximately 6,100 NATO tanks and that "this ratio just about corresponds to established Soviet 'attack norms,' three-to-one superiority."

Looking beyond Europe, General Haig said that the West "must develop the ability to manage in a global sense." And while he saw some improvement in the alliance's defense position, notably the addition of three West German and two United States brigades, he warned of the extent of Soviet military spending, which he said, was "roughly 30 percent" higher in the last year than that of the United States.

While agreeing with the figures on Soviet spending and quantitative force superiority, United States analysts noted that NATO retained superiority in number and performance of air-to-surface and surface-to-surface precision-guided weapons for use against enemy tanks. They added that, while Soviet military production far exceeded American, the European production, particularly German and British, did something to redress the balance.

Basque General Strike Set Monday

By HENRY GINIGER
Special to The New York Times

VITORIA, Spain, March 5—A general strike was called for next Monday throughout the Basque country in protest against the police killing of three men and the wounding of dozens of others in Vitoria Wednesday.

Amid tears and shouts of anger, the three workers were buried here this morning after a funeral that combined solemn rites with political protests. The Roman Catholic Church joined tens of thousands of workers in denouncing the police and the Government and it was apparent that reconciliation between the long-repressed Basque provinces and the central power in Madrid was farther away than ever despite Spain's transition to more liberal times.

Vitoria remained a paralyzed city on the verge of further violence, so high are feelings running here after the fighting Wednesday. The police used automatic weapons then in an attempt to break up efforts by tens of thousands of workers to shut down the city in support of their weeks-long strike.

Most of the trouble began when the police attacked a church in which several thousand workers were meeting. Throughout Spain in the past two months of labor unrest workers have met in churches with the approval of the hierarchy for lack of other meeting places.

Under Spain's concordat with the Vatican, churches are inviolate, although a clause gives authorities to right to enter in case of emergency. This clause was invoked Wednesday and the Church of San Francisco, a starkly modern building of concrete and steel, was attacked although the local hierarchy was not consulted.

This morning in the main cathedral before the families and comrades of the three dead men, a bitter sermon was read in the name of the bishop, the Most Rev. Francisco Peralta Ballabriga, and all the priests of the diocese. The sermon protested the "profanation" of a temple, which it called a "kind of community house and refuge," and the sermon went on to ask:

"By virtue of what right and in the name of what just end can anyone, least of all those who undertake the mission of defending order and justice, penetrate violently, without the consent of the bishop, in one of our temples and break up by force an orderly meeting that was taking place there?"

Killings Called Unjustified

The priest denounced to great applause "the veritable profanation of one of our temples" and, more seriously, the profanation of "the right to life." he declared the killings were "absolutely unjustified," either in the name of the law, in the name of so-called self-defense or in the name of defense of law and order.

A procession was formed after the service. With the three coffins borne by the comrades of the victims, it wound through the city.

Winegrowers in France Mourn Casualties

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

NARBONNE, France, March 5—Deeply shocked and angry, the wine growers of this area observed a day of what one called "dignified mourning" after a gun battle with the police that left two dead and 29 wounded yesterday.

"It took blood, French blood, to pay for the cries of one side and the deafness of the other," said the regional paper Midi Libre today.

Two Narbonne wine growers, whose arrest had set off a wild night of destruction of government property and led to the shooting yesterday, were released on their own recognizance in Lyons, where they had been taken for questioning, and they arrived home tonight. That calmed the situation temporarily.

But Michel Romain, an enraged young vintner who heads the Narbonne Action Committee, said that the situation now depends on a Common Market decision expected in Brussels that will affect the price of local wine.

Parliament Session Urged

Members of Parliament from the region, all Socialists, called for a special session of the National Assembly to deal with what they said threatened to become "a civil war."

That was the mood of the wine growers, who with their families represent about half the population of the area on France's Mediterranean coast. Others, who had always sympathized with the growers, were more sober and perturbed.

"The vintners are right, we know their cause is good," a hotelkeeper in Narbonne said. "But they've gone too far. There have been deaths. That is too much."

And in Montpellier, to the east, a resident said that the people at the hairdresser she visited today were complaining about the violence, not only because of the casualties but also because dynamiting of the television-relay station would keep them from watching the Wales-France rugby match this weekend and might keep their screens dark for a year.

The wine of the area is distinctly ordinary. It used to be mixed with Algerian wine to strengthen it, but that changed after Algeria's independence. Then merchants started buying Italian wine, which is entitled to move freely across the border, to raise the alcohol content of the local product.

French consumption of wine has dropped in recent years, and the poorer qualities have suffered most. The Government encouraged growers in the Languedoc to invest in better vines. But cheaper wages in Italy, absence of the strict rules governing French wine production and Italy's devaluation of the lira left the growers here heavily in debt and unable to compete, even after France imposed import taxes in violation of Common Market rules.

The area lives on wine. There is a uranium-refining factory in Narbonne that employs about 300, an I.B.M. plant in Montpellier, the beginning of a tourist industry on a swampy coast, but almost nothing else. An attempt to convert to fruit growing was disastrous. Half the annual apple crop is bought by the Government and destroyed to bolster prices.

2 AMERICANS FREED BY LISBON WORKERS

LISBON, March 5 (UPI)—Striking Communist-led workers today freed two American tire executives they had kept locked in their factory since Monday in Lisbon's industrial "Red Belt."

The workers, who took the executives, Maurice Brunson and R. James Roney, hostage during a retroactive-pay dispute, said that they decided to release them after the two signed a document promising to attend talks on the dispute.

"The workers decided in a General meeting in the early morning to allow the two administrators to go free," a Labor Ministry official said. He did not confirm, however, that the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company executives had signed any pledges to negotiate with the workers, who remained on strike at the factory in the Alochete suburb.

Although th eworkers contended that there had been no police intervention, a United States Embassy official said that two National Guardsmen apparently went to the factory to persuade the strikers to soften their protest.

Emigre Body Lists Aides At U. N. as Soviet Agents

Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Mar. 5—Four European émigré organizations have sent to non-Communist United Nations delegations lists of names and addresses of Soviet and Polish officials here they say are secret agents of the K.G.B., the Soviet intelligence and internal-security agency. They asked for expulsion of the officials.

The four groups described themselves as members of the Combat Organization representing Free Poland, the Cossack Defense Department, Free Slovakia and the Croatian Liberation Army.

A spokesman, Konstanty Z. Hanff, said they had acted because they wanted to warn delegations of the dangers of Communist subversive activities and also because the K.G.B. had had a hand in publishing details about the Central Intelligence Agency, which led to the killing of Richard S. Welch, C.I.A. station chief in Athens, last December.

Welshmen Think Twice, or Thrice, About Home Rule

ROBERT B. SEMPLE Jr.

NEATH, Wales—The night
[illegible] R. Gwyn Jones, a [illegible] principal here, had sitting in a pub on the of Swansea Bay, drink-pint of lager and facing
—as Welshmen talk love to do—the question of his Welshness. In the les end he seemed to decide that while s British too, that Wales extricably linked to the f the United Kingdom, hat people who had n their souls into the f rebuilding a separate identity had their pri-

to practice a little of

hey do every year, the ers of the working people of Neath came Jones's junior school in traditional Welsh es—tall black hats and red shawls handed by older sisters. They he national anthem in

A Sweeping Debate

Mr. Jones said, casting eye over his innocent uency. "But the real they will be going a world bigger than n Jones and his pupils te the ambiguities of

cts. But unlike Scothere the assembly is many as tantamount
e rule, and by some irst step toward com-separation—Wales is not so sure that it wants it at all.

"Shout yes in a street in Wales, and a dozen people will shout back no," remarked Jack Dummer, head of the Neath Trades Council, paraphrasing an old commentary about the Welshman's love of argument for argument's sake. But the polls back him up: 30 percent want an assembly, 40 percent do not, at least in the form offered by Mr. Wilson, and 30 percent don't know what they think.

All this is surprising to anyone who has read of the growth of Welsh nationalism over the last 10 years. Encouraged mainly by two groups—the Plaid Cymru, the Welsh nationalist party that would like to see Wales separated from the United Kingdom, and the Welsh Language Society—the old culture seemed to be reasserting itself.

Rise in Welsh Power

Welshmen regained the right, for example, to use Welsh in the courts; the Welsh Language Act of 1967 gave Welsh equal validity with English in the schools, and schools are supposed to offer six hours of instruction a week in the language; the "Welsh-Welsh," as opposed to the Anglo-Welsh, who live comfortably in both cultures, have been infiltrating the many boards and commissions that help run local government in Wales.

One result of these efforts has been to arrest the decline in the number of people who can actually speak the ancient Celtic language that, in its present form, dates back to the sixth century. Half of Wales spoke Welsh in 1900; the figure dropped to about 21 percent by 1971, where it has now stabilized.

The proposed Welsh assembly was seen by many ardent nationalists as yet another step along the same path: a platform from which the spread of Welsh culture could be encouraged and expanded. But what has happened is that the proposal itself has forced many Welshmen to think anew about themselves. And what they have concluded is that while they are proud of their national heritage — as Gwyn Jones is proud of it—they do not wish to lose them ties with the outside world.

"There's been something of a backlash against nationalism," said Fred Kingdom, a soft-spoken county councilor from West Glamorgan at dinner the other evening in the Dragon, Swansea's best hotel, and one of many public places named after the principality's symbol.

The reasons for the backlash are economic and historical. Wales cannot escape its Commercial ties with London any more than it can escape the Anglicizing influences of history, beginning with the subjugation of Wales by Edward I in 1282 and extending through the Tudor kings, who annexed Wales in the 16th century, to the brutal uniformity of the 19th century, when a royal commission asserted that the Welsh people were "imprisoned" by their language and schoolchildren were punished for speaking Welsh by being made to wear a wooden collar known as the Welsh Not, around their necks.

"There is a card for sale in the shops for parents of newborn children," a bookseller in Cardiff commented the other day. "It shows a pram with a little hand sticking out waving a red dragon flag, and it says, 'Congratulations, another little Welshman!' That's fund and good, but it doesn't get to the basic realities."

Those realities are jobs and incomes, and it is at this point that men who will sing "Men or Harlech" on St. David's Day until their throats go dry begin to think twice about the economic consequences of nationalism.

Southern Wales, of which West Glamorgan is a part, is a case in point. Tal Jenkins, a community leader in Neath, remembers the days when striking miners could practically dig coal out of their own backyards, days when one Welshman in 20 toiled—in the words of the poet W. H. Davies—"deep in sunless pits, and emptying all their hills to warm the world."

Collieries Fade Away

But the collieries have retreated from the brown and green valleys: between 1948 and 1974, employment in the coal industry fell from 136,000 to 39,000. What has taken the place of the collieries and cushioned the shock are the industrial "estates" conceived in London and directed to Wales, huge tracts that sprawl across the countryside, providing homes for multinational giants like Ford and Imperial Chemical Industries Ltd. and British Petroleum, and jobs for the sons and grandsons of the miners.

Ironically, London has even provided some of the money for the resurgence of Welsh culture, including funds for the road signs on major highways that are printed in both languages. And the publicly owned British Broadcasting Corporation provides many hours of television in Welsh.

Will Wales eventually accept some measure of local control that London has offered it? Most people in West Glamorgan think that despite the present confusion it will. But if a week's soundings and the polls are accurate, it will not be quite the assembly the ardent nationalists had in mind when a man named Saunders Lewis formed the Plaid Cymru 51 years ago and began pushing in earnest for home rule.

"The great hope of devolution," says John Beale, the chief education officer in West Glamorgan, and a longtime friend of Gwyn Jones, "is that it will give us a democratically responsive forum where we can, for the first time, start thinking about where the money in Wales ought to go. For my own part, I see it as a chance to get together and begin to harness our educational way. But that does not mean that Welsh will end up being our first language.

Mrs. Meir Resumes Role In Her Party's Leadership

Special to The New York Times

TEL AVIV, March 5—Golda Meir came out of political retirement today to resume an active role in the leadership of Israel's governing Labor Party and help the hard-pressed Prime Minister, Yitzhak Rabin.

The 77-year-old Mrs. Meir, who had shunned domestic politics since she quit as Prime Minister and resigned her seat in Parliament in 1974, made her comeback at the urging of her successor, Mr. Rabin.

She joined the new "leadership forum" created by Mr. Rabin in answer to increasing criticism of his administration, which has been torn by rivalries among Cabinet leaders. Mrs. Meir is the only member without an official position.

The forum, which is expected to coordinate among the party's representatives in the Government and other public bodies, consists of six Cabinet members and top officials of the Labor Party, the General Federation of Labor and the World Zionist Executive.

Mrs. Meir also agreed to return to the Labor Party's leadership bureau, or top executive body, which consists of some 40 members. She is expected to be the dominant influence and to strengthen Mr. Rabin, whose stock in the party and with the public has been dwindling.

With Mrs. Meir in attendance, the forum met today and soon after it was announced that one of the party quarrels had been settled. Meir Zarmi, who had quit as the party's secretary general two weeks ago, agreed to withdraw his resignation.

In resigning, he had charged that Mr. Rabin and other leaders had ignored the party's decision-making bodies, which in the past had settled differences among party officials. It was announced today that Mr. Rabin had accepted Mr. Zarmi's demands, including the scheduling of regular meetings of the party's executive group with Cabinet ministers participating.

There is no official position of leader of the Labor Party, but as a rule the incumbent Prime Minister has been the acknowledged leader. Mr. Rabin, however, has never attained this authority.

He was virtually a political novice when he was thrust into power in 1974, having been elected to Parliament for the first time only a few months earlier. He had previously been commander of the Israel defense forces and Ambassador to Washington.

He was chosen for the Prime Minister's post largely because he did not share the stigma with the Meir government for the country's lack of preparedness when the Egyptians and Syrians launched their surprise attack in October 1973.

Two aspirants for the Prime Minister post—Defense Minister Shimon Peres and Foreign Minister Yigal Allon—clashed with Mr. Rabin and complained that he was not informing them of his diplomatic moves.

Newspapers here reported that Mr. Rabin had made contemptuous remarks about Cabinet colleagues. His statement during his mission to Washington criticizing his Government's military shopping list was interpreted as an attack on Mr. Peres. Mr. Rabin had to apologize in Parliament to avoid a Cabinet crisis.

Polyansky Up From Farm to Politburo And Down After a Harvest Disaster

By DAVID K. SHIPLER
Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, March 5—Born on Nov. 7, 1917, the very day the Bolsheviks took power, Dmitri Stepanovich Polyansky rose rapidly through the ranks of Communist politicians, hovered for a while at the fringes of substantive power, then began a long fall that culminated today in his ouster from the ruling Politburo. It was a career shaped and bruised by the rough-and-tumble world of Soviet politics.

At the end, Mr. Polyansky became the scapegoat for the catastrophic failures of Soviet agriculture. Even though the Kremlin had officially placed most of the fault for last year's bad harvest on the fickle weather that plagues this country, the Government press and speaker after speaker at the 25th Communist Party Congress had pointed at undermechanization, inadequate spare parts, inadequate research into high-yield strains of crops and other administrative deficiencies.

Mr. Polyansky, as Minister of Agriculture, was criticized harshly. He was the highest official to be attacked during the Congress. When Leonid I. Brezhnev, the party chief, read the names of the new Politburo to the 5,000 delegates today, Mr. Polyansky's name was missing.

Still Holds State Post

His removal from his seat on the Politburo, a party position, does not automatically affect his job as Agriculture Minister, a Government post. But nobody in Moscow would be astonished if he were soon ousted from that chair as well.

His accession to the high altitudes of Soviet power was fast, perhaps too fast for his own good. Having joined the Communist party in 1939, he began his working life—according to official Soviet biographies—as a hand on a state farm. He was graduated from the Kharkov Agricultural Institute in 1939 and from the Higher Party School in 1942.

From 1942 to 1945, he headed the political section of a machine tractor station, then rose to the position of first secretary of a party district organization in Siberia.

During the Stalin years, he moved steadily up the rungs of the party ladder. His biography is studded with entries none more than a year or two apart—from secretary to first secretary, from first secretary of a district to secretary of a larger region, then first secretary of the regional committee, and on and on, always upward.

Sovfoto
Dmitri S. Polyansky

In 1958 Mr. Polyansky became Prime Minister of the Russian Republic, one of 15 republics in the Soviet Union. In 1960, when he was only 43 years old, he was elected to the ruling Politburo, then called the Presidium, as its youngest member.

"At one time, he really seemed like the fair-haired boy," a high-ranking Western diplomat observed today. Then hte diplomat aded, "He looked a bit too young and energetic and ambitious."

This was a reference to the suspicions that senior officials in the Soviet system have harbored through recent history about the bright young man who stands out, who appears to pose a threat as a rallying point for possible maneuvers aimed at shifting leadership.

Mr. Polyansky played at least several hands clearly. In 1957, he is believed to have taken Nikita S. Khrushchev's side in forestalling an attempt by the so-called "antiparty group" to oust the party leader. Then a nonvoting member of the Politburo, Mr. Polyansky also endorsed Mr. Khrushchev's de-Stalinization effort.

But by 1964, when the political winds had changed, so had Mr. Polyansky. In his book "Power in the Kremlin," Michel Tatu reports that on Oct. 16, 1964, when the Presidium confronted Mr. Khrushchev in the process of ousting him, Mr. Polyanski participated in the attack, criticizing the party chief for his failures in, of all things, agriculture.

But Mr. Polyansky never quite moved to the center of the power structure. In 1963, a Pravda photograph showed him at a Politburo meeting sitting not with the full members, although he was a full member then, but in a chair among the nonvoting members. He was regarded, because of his age, as "a junior member," a label he never really overcame.

Specialists in Soviet affairs noticed in the early 1960's that Mr. Polyansky's Government post—Deputy Prime Minister—was too low for a Politburo member. But after Mr. Khrushchev was dismissed, it took a year for Mr. Polyansky to be promoted to First Deputy Prime Minister in charge of agriculture.

That was as high as he got. In 1973, in wake of the disastrous grain harvest of the previous year, Mr. Polyansky was demoted to Agriculture Minister. The minister, Vladimir V. Matskevich, was dismissed. Some Western observers believe that with bad soil, bad weather, bad organization and a bad system—namely, collective farms—agriculture in the Soviet Union is a no-win job. Mr. Polyansky may have proved the point.

Sketches of Three Promoted in Soviet

Grigory V. Romanov

Heads the Communist Party Committee for the Leningrad Region. . . . At 53 he becomes the Politburo's youngest full member and one of the few top leaders whose career developed after the Stalin era. . . . Widely regarded by Western specialists as "a man to watch" as a possible candidate for party secretary general some day. . . . In his position as a local party leader, he is thought to favor a modicum of decentralization in economic controls. . . . Born in 1923. . . . Graduated from the Leningrad Shipbuilding Institute by correspondence course. . . . Worked as a designer in the construction industry. . . . Joined the Communist Party in 1944. . . . Became a secretary in the Kirov District of the Communist Party in Leningrad in 1957, then later the first secretary. . . . Was named in 1961 as a secretary of the Leningrad City Party Committee. . . . In 1963 he became a secretary in the Committee of the Leningrad Region, considered higher than the city committee. . . . Since 1970, he has been first secretary of the Leningrad Regional Committee, and in 1973 he was promoted to alternate member of the Politburo.

Dmitri F. Ustinov

Defense industry specialist for more than 30 years, opponent of Khrushchev's moves toward economic decentralization . . . He is 67 years old . . . has little if any experience in the fields of agriculture, foreign affairs or the problems of nationalities within the Soviet Union . . . First Ugandans Fly MIG's

NAIROBI, Kenya, March 5 (AP)—The first Uganda pilots trained to fly MIG-21's by Soviet experts in Uganda have made their initial solo flights in the jets, the Uganda radio announced. The broadcast said President Idi Amin saw the flights at Entebbe Airport on Wednesday and praised the Russians for helping black Africans.

State Police in Iran End U.S. Advisory Assistance

TEHERAN, Iran, March 5 (AP)—Iran has formally ended the services of the United States advisory mission to its state police after 34 years of assistance.

The commander of the Iranian state police, Lieut. Gen. Abass Gharabaghai, said at a final ceremony with the last 16 American advisers that his men had advanced to a point where they no longer needed assistance.

He hailed the contribution the United States group had made in modernizing the state police, including a drive against narcotics.

The advisory group totaled 900 men at its peak.

There are still thousands of United States military advisers working with the Iranian armed forces.

Argentina Announces an Emergency Economic Plan

By JUAN de ONIS
Special to The New York Times

BUENOS AIRES, March 5—The Argentine peso was devalued nearly 70 percent and a 180-day "truce" in wage and price increases was announced tonight as part of an "emergency plan" against inflation and foreign debt.

Minister of Economy Emilio Mondelli announced the plan over national television as a necessary measure to save the government of President Isabel Martinez de Perón from a military overthrow.

"We know the sacrifice this plan means for the people, but if we don't do it, others will, and not be precisely for the benefit of the workers," Mr. Mondelli said.

He announced a 12 percent wage increase, effective March 1, for some workers, but he called for no further increases for 180 days. Prices have risen 40 percent since the last wage increase Jan. 1.

Price Controls Planned

Strong measures to control prices of essential consumer goods will be adopted, Mr. Mondelli said, and he called on businessmen to accept sacrifices of profits for 180 days as part of the truce.

The devaluation consolidates two exchange rates that had applied to different types of exports and capital transfer. The basic export and import rate had been 76 pesos to a dollar, and the capital market rate had been 109 pesos to a dollar. Both were unified in a new rate of 140 pesos to a dollar.

The purpose is to promote exports and reduce imports to offset what Mr. Mondelli said was a $1 billion deficit last year in Argentina's balance of payments.

A free tourist market rate continues. Quotations were halted on this market today by an exchange holiday. The rate stood at 250 to 270 pesos to a dollar yesterday.

2 Days of Meetings

The "emergency plan" was adopted after two days of meetings between Mrs. Perón and union leaders in which Mr. Mondelli explained that Argentina could not pay its foreign debts next month unless drastic measures were taken to obtain new foreign loans.

Loans and other short-term obligations to foreign creditors totaling $1.1 billion fall due by May, and creditors have insisted that Argentina must stabilize its finances to be worthy of new credit.

The financial disorder that had developed during 33 months of Peronist Government was reflected last year in a 335 percent increase in prices. Argentina lost about $1 billion in hard currency reserves.

Inflation Still Rising

Inflation has continued to soar in the first two months of this year, raising prices 40 percent. At this rate, the cost of living would go up 500 to 600 percent this year.

The price explosion has generated heavy union pressure for price controls and wage increases. Each time the Government sought to apply controls, goods disappeared from stores and appeared on the black market at higher prices. Each wage increase has been followed by equivalent or larger price increases.

The Government tried to maintain low prices for consumer goods by setting artificially low exchange rates for imports, but this policy depleted the exchange reserves, which totaled $1.8 billion two years ago. They are now less than $300 million.

The worldwide increase in petroleum prices was not passed on in full to consumers here. As a result, the state oil company absorbed huge losses. This depleted resources that were intended for oil exploration here, and oil production has dropped 10 percent in the last year.

Money Supply Doubles

Each round of wage increases increased the deficit in state enterprises, such as the national railroads, telephone company and power and water services. The civil service payroll and federal aid to provincial governments rose much faster than Government tax revenues.

Last year only one of every three pesos spent by the government was financed by taxes. The remainder was paid for by borrowing or by printing money. The amount of money in circulation has doubled in less than a year.

This is the situation that Mr. Mondelli, a 61-year-old banker, is trying to ease. He was president of the central bank until January, when he became the sixth minister of economy in less than three years of Peronist Government.

Political divisions within the Peronist movement postponed the decision to adopt the "emergency plan" for several weeks as labor leaders and Mrs. Perón quarreled over economic and social policy.

The Peronist party congress is scheduled to meet here tomorrow to elect a new executive committee. There is an official list of candidates loyal to Mrs. Perón, but the opposition to her advisers, including Mr. Mondelli, is strong.

GROUP IN SAHARA NAMES GOVERNMENT

ALGIERS, March 5 (Reuters)—The western Sahara independence movement known as the Polisario Front tonight named an eight-man government for its newly proclaimed Saharan Arab Democratic Republic.

The Algerian-backed Polisario is fighting for the independence of the former Spanish Sahara against opposition from Morocco and Mauritania, to whom Spain handed over control last month.

The Government is headed by Mohamed Lamine Ahmed, an assistant to Polisario secretary general, Sayid el Quali.

Three ministers were named for defense, foreign affairs and the interior.

The formation of the Government was announced at a press conference here one week after the Polisario proclaimed a republic, described as nonaligned, progressive and Moslem.

British Give Up on Ulster Talks; Plan to Rule Province Indefinitely

nouncement, viewing it as a reaffirmation that Britain intended to remain in Northern Ireland. The I.R.A. has traditionally sought to remove the British from the north, and erase the border between Ulster and the predominantly Catholic Irish Republic in the south.

Moderate Catholic and Protestant politicians in the north, as well as the Irish Government, supported Britain's plans to run Ulster as long as power-sharing seemed out of the question.

Within the six counties of Northern Ireland, Protestants retain a two-thirds majority, and have controlled the political and economic life of the province for more than 50 years. Until 1972 Britain played a secondary, if supportive, role.

In March 1972, following Catholic civil-rights marches, attacks on soldiers and the police and the wholesale internment of Catholics without trial, the British faced a breakdown of law and order in Ulster and assumed responsibility for the province.

Since then Britain has sought, without success, to extricate itself from power in Northern Ireland and to work out a political arrangement that would blunt extremists on both sides and create a Catholic-Protestant coalition. Militant Protestants fear that a compromise with Catholics would lead to a loosening of the border with the Irish Republic.

Protestants React Angrily
Special to The New York Times

BELFAST, Northern Ireland, March 5—Protestant politicians reacted angrily today to the dissolution of the Convention. Two leading figures warned that the British Government would be responsible for any further bloodshed and violence. But there were no immediate threats of political or paramilitary action to force the British to reconsider their decision.

Henry West, leader of the United Ulster Unionist coalition, which controlled 40 of the 78 seats in the Convention, said the instability and political unrest in the province had been created by the British.

Seamus Loughran, speaking for Provisional Sinn Fein, the political wing of the I. R. A., said that as far as the Republican movement was concerned any imposed solution—including direct rule—was doomed to failure.

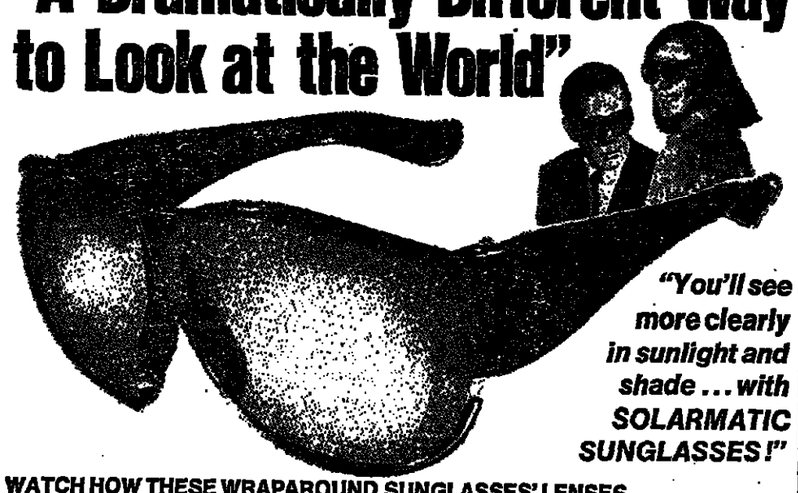
"A Dramatically Different Way to Look at the World"



"You'll see more clearly in sunlight and shade . . . with SOLARMATIC SUNGLASSES!"

WATCH HOW THESE WRAPAROUND SUNGLASSES' LENSES AUTOMATICALLY BRIGHTEN TO HELP YOU SEE THROUGH FOG AND HAZE! THEN WATCH THEM AUTOMATICALLY DARKEN TO CONQUER BLAZING SUN AND BLINDING SNOW! SEE AND ENJOY EVERYTHING IN A BEAUTIFUL EXCITING NEW LIGHT!

Our amazing new Solarmatic Wraparound Sunglasses are the complete year-round dawn-to-dusk outdoor glasses —to be worn in all kinds of weather, from bright sunlight to deep shade and gloomy fog! From the moment you put them on, you'll be in a position to see the world around you focused more beautifully—with uninterrupted clarity!

How They Work.

These revolutionary sunglasses automatically adjust to sun or shade; lenses actually change color to deal with changes in light intensity! In bright, glaring sun, the lenses darken to screen out strong rays and protect your eyes . . . then lighten the moment a cloud or shadow comes along, to improve your visibility!

A Dramatic Breakthrough for Safety.

With our Solarmatic glasses, you no longer "drive blind", every time you go from sun to shade, until your eyes adjust. These lenses do the adjusting for you, faster than your eyes ever could on their own! So you needn't take your hand off the wheel to flip your glasses up or down, every time you go into an underpass, or from snow to clouds or rain to snow or fog. And even the scenery becomes more beautiful, as you see it clear and colorful, without glare or eyestrain!

Enjoy Sports Activities More!

Golfers can play more easily in changing weather, with visibility unaffected by sun or haze. It's easier to follow the ball, spot tendencies to hook or slice. Balls that end up in the rough are more easily located. You can spot pins at a greater distance, and the course will have fewer mysteries for you!

The Versatile Wraparounds.

Solarmatic wraparounds are convenient for wearing alone, or over your present prescription eyeglasses. They are so light (weigh about 1 oz.) you'll hardly know you have them on. Their orange-amber lenses are impact-resistant, for added safety. You'll find them the most practical, most wearable sunglasses you've ever owned! And they're yours for only $4.99 a pair!

30-DAY MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE
We unconditionally guarantee that our Solarmatic Sunglasses will automatically adjust to changing conditions of brightness, as their scientific "thinking" lenses darken to protect your eyes against bright sunlight and glare . . . then lighten to give you better visibility in shade and fog. They have been perfected by the oldest sunglass manufacturer in the U.S.A.—a pioneer since 1853. Wear them for 90 days, and if they don't do all that we claim, simply return for Prompt Refund of purchase price.

odesia Defense Chief Thanks issinger for Warning to Cuba

By HENRY KAMM
Special to The New York Times

ISBURY, Rhodesia, 5—Rhodesia expressed s today to Secretary of Henry A. Kissinger for his ng to Cuba yesterday t possible intervention in nflict between Rhodesia's minority Government frican nationalists.

on the same occasion, a ed news conference, sia's Foreign and Defense er, Pieter K. van der Byl, iat there was "no indica- t all of any Cuban, or Russian, presence of any cance in Mozambique."

onfirmed reports have ed in the press of the in Mozambique's port of of Cuban troops and So- anks for use against sia. Mr. van der Byl these reports "scaremon- " etheless, the underlying ten reiterated theme of nister's declarations was ie Soviet Union was di- the black nationalist la war on Rhodesia's border with the even- n of seizing all of South- rica, and that the West, for Rhodesia and South was unwilling to resist.

I would like to take this unity of expressing my ation of what the Amer- ecretary of State said," n der Byl declared. "One only be thankful that at omebody in the Western is beginning to realize nace that threatens the o the extent of being take a positive line on ssing the current nego- between Prime Minister Smith and Joshua Nko- der of the African Na- tional council, on the black nationalist demand for majority rule, Mr. van der Byl said:

"We are negotiating with a man who represents a limited number of people in the country. The reason we are doing it is because the world, thanks to the buildup these people get from the media, believes that the African population . . . that these people go along with him. They don't, but the rest of the world believes that these African nationalists have this enormous following. We have no option but go along with it."

Mr. van der Byl said the various leaders of the factionalized African National council "have not got 25 percent of the African population behind them." He continued:

"The average African living in the Tribal Trust Lands doesn't know what it's all about and probably thinks that something like self-determination is something on the menu, and he has no idea about this business that's going on."

'Only Criminal Terrorists'

To a questioner who used the word "guerrillas," the minister rejoined:

"There are no guerrillas in Rhodesia, only criminal terrorists."

Mr. van der Byl described Bishop Abel Muzorewa, who heads what is believed to be the largest faction of the African National Council, as "not yet" a Communist but "merely an opportunist."

The minister spoke with particular distaste of the Roman Catholic Commission for Justice and Peace in Rhodesia, a body of the Rhodesian bishops' Conference. The church group has demanded inquiries into reported atrocities attributed to troops.

Minister Visits Johannesburg

JOHANNESBURG, March 5 (Reuters) — The Rhodesian Foreign and Defense Minister Pieter K. van der Byl, arrived here tonight amid speculation that he would be conferring with the South African Government on his country's African nationalist guerrilla problems.

Nationalist Meets Castro

NAIROBI, Kenya, March 5 (Agence France-Presse)—Jason Moyo, a Rhodesian African nationalist, talked with Prime Minister Fidel Castro of Cuba in Moscow for 90 minutes, but did not ask him to send Cuban soldiers to Rhodesia, Mr. Moyo said here tonight.

Take a Stroll on Madison Ave.

SATURDAY ON MADISON AVENUE—It offers life, excitement, people. It is a happening. A short, leisurely stroll will bring to you some of the best art galleries and museums of the world—great restaurants, friendly bars and cafes—and some of the most intriguing of boutiques.

SHERRY-LEHMANN OFFERS DISCOVERIES. We are part of these joyous happenings. We will give you a warm welcome; our salesmen are handsome, courteous, well-informed and smile. Best of all, unlike most liquor shops, you don't have to lug your bargains home because we DELIVER FREE on any order over $25 anywhere within the five boroughs, Long Island and Westchester.

WONDERFUL THINGS ABOUND HERE. If you come in TODAY or any other day, here are just a few of the good things you will find:

GRAB-BAG OF BARGAINS

BONE DRY MONTILLA AMONTILLADO @ $1.99
COTES DU RHONE ROUGE 1973 @ $1.99
BERSANO VALPOLICELLA or SOAVE @ $1.99
CHATEAU PITRAY 1970 (Bordeaux Rouge) @ $2.29

CHATEAU GRAND PUY DUCASSE 1971 @ $4.39

SAVE $99.46 THE CASE

YES! YOU SAVE $99.46! The prize-winning, dramatically great RENE LALOU 1969 Champagne of G. H. Mumm, sold throughout the U.S. only last week for $270.16 the case. It fetched approximately the same price, and well worth it, as such famed Champagnes as Dom Perignon, Roederer Cristal, and Taittinger Blanc de Blancs.

BLIND TASTINGS which we attended in Monaco during February produced the evidence. RENE LALOU 1969 was chosen as the best Champagne submitted to a group of wine experts. If you buy a bottle, you will surely come back for a case of this remarkable wine which is beautifully presented in its handsome traditional 19th century bottle.

QUANTITY IS LIMITED and the price is truly astonishing — only $15.99 the bottle. $172.70 the case. First come, first served.

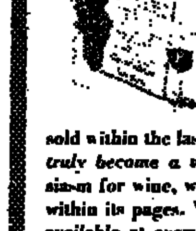
END-OF-BIN-SALE continues

END-OF-BIN SALE flourishes in London and we have brought the custom to America. It simply means when certain wines are running out, we sell the remainder at wholesale or below wholesale. OUR BARRELS ARE FULL this weekend. Come early and you will pull out many happy surprises.

JOYOUS JEROBOAMS

WHAT IS A JEROBOAM? It is a giant bottle which holds the equal of four regular bottles, thus imparting to the wine contents longer life, slower maturation, and drama when served. CHATEAU GREYSAC 1970, a superb Medoc of great vintage year, was proudly produced by George Hereil, Chairman of Chrysler-Europe. These larger bottles were for M. Hereil's own pleasure and for the members of the board of Chrysler. Happily, we persuaded this prestigious vigneron to ship us about 100 Jeroboams. We offer them, while they last, to appreciative wine lovers for only $16.95 the Jeroboam.

CLIFTON FADIMAN and SAM AARON Comment on THE JOYS OF THE WINE



"It was a scant three years ago that Harry N. Abrams, distinguished art book publisher, persuaded us both to accept the challenge of writing an encyclopedic volume titled THE JOYS OF WINE. We worked long, hard, but joyously. In our professional lives, there have been few undertakings that have given us greater satisfaction. The wisdom of Harry N. Abrams was confirmed when he advised us only last week that 50,000 copies were sold within the last three months—evidence that America has now truly become a wine-conscious nation. If you share our enthusiasm for wine, we think you will find many informative delights within its pages. We happily report that THE JOYS OF WINE is available at every leading bookshop throughout the U.S." THE JOYS OF WINE available in Madison Ave. area book stores. If you bring the book to Sherry-Lehmann, we'll have the authors autograph your copy.

MEDOC and ST. EMILION

NATHANIEL JOHNSTON is among the most reliable, informed and honest Bordeaux wine merchants. His Bordeaux wines have long been the standards by which others are judged. During the great 1970 vintage, his MEDOC and ST. EMILION reached exalted heights and have only recently achieved sufficient maturity to be enjoyed for current drinking. Both of these sold for well over $4 the bottle during the last few months. We offer you the choice of MEDOC 1970 and ST. EMILION 1970 at only $2.39 the bottle. $28.90 the case.

SPIRITS ON SALE

Our comparative shoppers report that SHERRY-LEHMANN offers the lowest legally possible prices in New York. Not even the most courageous of liquor price cutters offer lower prices. Skeptical?—Here is the evidence . . .

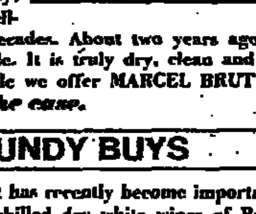
FRENCH CHAMPAGNE $6.99?



THOUGH IT HAPPENS RARELY THESE DAYS, a large strategic purchase of top-flight French Champagnes has made it possible. All of the savings — and a good portion of our normal profit margin—are being passed on to you. MARCEL BRUT, from one of the best Champagne firms of Epernay, has been consistently our best-selling Champagne for over two decades. About two years ago it reached a high of $10 the bottle. It is truly dry, clean and of delicate bouquet. During this sale we offer MARCEL BRUT at $6.99 the bottle. $79.95 the case.

BEST BURGUNDY BUYS

Burgundy below $5 the bottle. It has recently become important since many people are serving chilled dry white wines of Burgundy rather than cocktails before dinner. The two best examples we have run across in years are ST. VERAN 1973, grown adjacent to Pouilly-Fuisse and identical in character—and SAINT ROMAIN 1972, grown in the hills of the Cote de Beaune just behind Meursault. Both will delight you—both are available at $2.99 the bottle. $35.75 the case.

Reported Exchanges Between the U.S. Secretary of State and Middle East Leac[ders]

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 5—Following are excerpts from what are described in the spring issue of the quarterly magazine Foreign Policy as verbatim conversations held by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger with the late King Faisal of Saudi Arabia in Riyadh in November 1973 and with Israeli officials in March 1975. Mr. Kissinger said today that the material appeared to be based on memorandums of conversations, but denied that the text was a verbatim transcript.

Kissinger With Faisal

KISSINGER: I recall Your Majesty's visit to the United States early during President Nixon's administration, when Your Majesty pointed out to the president some of the dangers in the Middle East. Many of Your Majesty's prophecies have come true. I wish to explain our actions in the war of last month. Your Majesty may not approve, but he must know why we acted as we did. We were motivated by a desire to prevent an increase of Communist influence, and when the Soviets began to send in arms we had to react.

FAISAL: Thank you for your explanation. I wish to remind you of what I said to President Nixon and to Secretary Rogers. It is essential to press Israel to withdraw from occupied territory. As you know, the Communists want the situation to remain critical. The United States used to stand up against aggression—you did that in World War II and in 1956 during the Suez war. If the United States had done the same after 1967 we would not have witnessed this deterioration. I speak as a friend, and I want you to know how painful it is for me to take steps which injure our friendship. . . . Israel is advancing Communist objectives. It is unfortunate that amongst those of the Jewish faith there are those who embrace Zionism. Before the Jewish state was established, there existed nothing to harm good relations between Arabs and Jews. There were many Jews in Arab countries. When the Jews were persecuted in Spain, Arabs protected them. When the Romans drove the Jews out, Arabs protected them. At Yalta, it was Stalin who said there had to be a Jewish state. It is necessary to establish in Palestine a mixed Jewish-Moslem state. Most of the immigration to Israel is from the Soviet Union, and they want to establish a Communist base right in the Middle East. Communists have no faith. They don't believe in God.

KISSINGER: Your Majesty, our problem now is how to proceed from the present situation—which we know is intolerable—to genuine peace.

FAISAL: That's easy. Make Israel withdraw.

KISSINGER: I agree that there must be Israeli withdrawals, but this is a complicated problem for the United States—and not just a foreign policy problem. We have decided to make a major effort to achieve a settlement. We've made a beginning in Egypt, and we've agreed with President Sadat to convene a peace conference. . . . Your Majesty will see that in the coming months we'll make a major effort to achieve progress.

FAISAL: I hope it will only take weeks.

KISSINGER: Well, that raises the question of Your Majesty's oil embargo. We understand the emotions that led to the embargo.

FAISAL: That is why you must move as quickly as possible—so that we can rescind the embargo. It was very painful for me to have been forced to take this action against our American friends.

KISSINGER: Your Majesty's decision had a serious effect, coming as it did from an old friend.

FAISAL: That's why I've suffered even more than you have.

KISSINGER: But now we face a new situation. Those who oppose peace seek to portray the Arabs as hostile to the United States. They are trying to turn opinion against our peace efforts. It will be difficult for us to go ahead if we face a continuing oil embargo. We can absorb the economic impact of the embargo, but the psychological impact worries me. I'd like to suggest that Your Majesty take steps to limit the application of the embargo.

FAISAL: I should like to rescind it immediately. I, too, am in a difficult position. It would be easier if the United States would announce that Israel must withdraw and permit the Palestinians to return to their homes.

KISSINGER: Such a dramatic announcement would produce very strong reactions. We must move step by step. I should like to urge Your Majesty to reflect. . . .

FAISAL: Our predicament is the other side of the coin. The Communists are accusing some Arabs of bowing to American pressure. To those who accuse you of bowing to Arab pressure, you can reply that the only reason the Arabs are doing this is because you support the enemy of the Arabs.

KISSINGER: Your Majesty, it doesn't work that way in the United States. Our best argument is not to say that we're anti-Israeli or pro-Arab, but that we want peace in the Middle East and that we're pursuing the interests of the United States. If we try to put it on the basis of the merits of the Arab-Israeli dispute, there will always be more people defending Israel than the Arab side. So we have to put it in terms of American national interests.

Allon Gives Position

ALLON: We'd still like to negotiate an interim or overall agreement, but not on the basis of an ultimatum from the other side.

KISSINGER: There was no ultimatum. In the absence of new Israeli ideas, we received no new Egyptian ideas. We have no illusions. The Arab leaders who banked on the United States will be discredited. Step-by-step has been throttled, first for Jordan, then for Egypt. We're losing control. There will be more emphasis on the Palestinians, and there will be a linkage between moves in the Sinai and on Golan. The Soviets will step back onto the stage. The United States is losing control over events, and we'd all better adjust ourselves to that reality. The Europeans will have to accelerate their relations with the Arabs. If the interim agreement in 1971 had succeeded there would have been no war in October 1973. The same process is at work here. We just don't have a strategy for the situation ahead. Our past strategy was worked out carefully, and now we don't know what to do. There will be pressures to drive a wedge between Israel and the United States, not because we want that but because it will be the dynamic of the situation. Let's not kid ourselves. We've failed.

ALLON: Why not start it up again in a few weeks?

KISSINGER: Things aren't going to be the same again. The Arabs won't trust us as they have in the past. We look weak—in Vietnam, Turkey, Portugal, in a whole range of things. Don't misunderstand me. I'm analyzing this situation with friends. One reason I and my colleagues are so exasperated is that we see a friend damaging himself for reasons which will seem trivial five years from now—like 700 Egyptian soldiers across the canal in 1971. I don't see how there can be another American initiative in the near future. We may have to go to Geneva for a multilateral effort with the Soviets—something which for five years we've felt did not offer the best hope for success. I had assumed that when Geneva reconvened everybody would look to us to propose the way of success. But that won't be so now.

ALLON: The Egyptians really didn't give very much.

KISSINGER: An agreement would have enabled the United States to remain in control of the diplomatic process. Compared to that, the location of the line eight kilometers one way or the other frankly does not seem very important. And you got all the military elements of nonbelligerency. You got the "non-use of force."

PERES: It is a question not just of the passes, but of our military [intelligence] installations that have no offensive purpose and are necessary. The previous government couldn't overcome the psychological blow—that the Syrians and Egyptians launched a surprise attack. We need an early warning system. We need 12 hours of warning. Under the proposed arrangement, we'd only have six. If there had been any Egyptian concessions regarding the duration of the agreement and the warning system, then what you've said would be very touching. But then we would have faced new neg[otiations] with Syria. . . .

KISSINGER: This [is a] tragedy. We've atten[pted to] reconcile our support [for Israel] with our other inte[rests in] the Middle East, so [that you] wouldn't have to m[ake] decisions all at o[nce. Our] strategy was to s[ave you] from dealing with [all the] pressures all at o[nce. I'm] not angry at you, [I'm] not asking you to [change] your position. It's [tragic to] see people doomin[g them]selves to a course [of un]believable peril.

RABIN: This is the [way you] visited Masada.

South Korea Frees One Critic of Park But Seizes Another

Special to The New York Times

SEOUL, South Korea, March 6—South Korean security officials continued their investigation yesterday of a group of dissidents who criticized the Government last Monday and called on President Park Chung Hee to step down.

Of 17 persons understood to have been arrested so far, one, the wife of former President Yun Po Sun, was said to have been freed.

But another prominent critic of the Government, Chyung Yil Hyung, was taken into custody. She is the wife of former Foreign Minister Chyung Yil Hyung.

Mrs. Chyung, who was the country's first woman lawyer, won a "world peace through justice" award in 1971 from the International Congress of Jurists, of which she is a member.

The latest series of arrests was prompted by a statement signed by 12 of South Korea's leading opposition figures this week criticizing what they termed President Park's "dictatorship."

The statement called for suspension of emergency measures, freedom for all political prisoners and restoration of full democracy.

Under the emergency decree of las May, all anti-government acts, including criticisms of the President and the Constitution, are outlawed. Violations are punishable by a minimum of a year in jail.

Two New Disturbances Break Out in Lebanon

Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, March 5 — As Palestinian and Lebanese troops took up new policing duties in Beirut today, disturbances were reported in two areas following a chain of violet incidents yesterday.

The unrest in the Akkar area north of Beirut appeared to involve dissident Moslem and Christian soldiers, and it underscored the problem of deserters plaguing Lebanon's unsettled political situation six weeks after a Syrian-negotiated cease-fire.

The second site of disturbances was an army garrison near the Christian town of Juniye.

Following clashes yesterday in the largely Christian village of al Qobayat—which may have been provoked by Moslem deserters nominally owing allegiance to a band calling itself the Lebanese Arab Army—Christian soldiers in the Serba garrison in the hills above Juniye mutinied and demanded a move northward to help their besieged co-religionists.

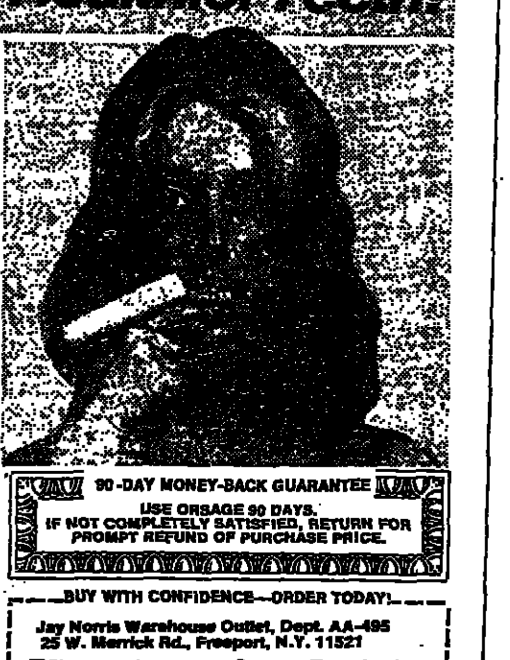
SAVE YOUR TEETH!
New! Dentist-Developed Gum Massager Promotes Healthier Gums, Healthier Teeth!



- Strong, deep-penetrating electric massage vibrations are transmitted directly through your fingertip to gum tissues.
- Absolutely safe to use. Only your soft fingertip touches delicate gum areas.
- Cordless. Use it any time, any place.

DENTISTS RECOMMEND
regular massage of gums to increase circulation, restore and maintain normal healthy tone of gum tissues, lessen possibility of infection. Now, healthful gum massage is remarkably easy and effective—thanks to new ORASAGE.

Now, at last, a practicing dentist has developed an amazing fingertip gum massager—safer, more effective than any conventional gum massage method available for home use.

How Orasage Gum Massager works. Orasage supplies strong, deep-penetrating vibratory massage and stimulation to all gum tissues. Simply slip your finger through the ring of this unique battery-powered electric massage unit. Then switch on the vibrator and place your fingertip firmly against your gums. It actually transmits thousands of stimulating vibrations directly through your fingertip as you gently move it from one gum area to another.

Orasage's powerful vibrating massage action increases circulation, restores and maintains normal healthy tone of gum tissues. And, as your own dentist can tell you, healthier gums mean healthier teeth, with far less chance of infection and costly dental bills.

Take it along anywhere. The compact, portable Orasage unit goes with you wherever you travel, just like your toothbrush. Use it any time, any place—even while reading or watching TV. No electric cord, no outlet, no water needed. The Orasage Massager* is 3¼" long, operates on one inexpensive penlight battery (not incl.). Comes with easy-to-follow directions from the dentist. Only $4.99.

*Protected by U.S. Patent No. 3,623,481.

Article Divulges Details of Kissinger Mideast Talks

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 5 — Extensive details of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's hitherto secret discussions with Middle East leaders have been divulged in an article just published.

The article, by Edward R. F. Sheehan, a Harvard research fellow, in the spring issue of the quarterly magazine Foreign Policy, contained lengthy exchanges by Mr. Kissinger with Israeli as well as Arab leaders during his Middle East "diplomatic shuttles."

The appearance of the new material — described by the magazine as "verbatim," but by Mr. Kissinger as based on memorandums of conversations —was a major source of concern to the State Department.

In recent months, Mr. Kissinger and others have publicly assailed Congress for leaks of classified material, but the Sheehan article seemed to contain classified material that had originated from within the Administration.

State Department officials said that Mr. Sheehan had had many interviews with key Kissinger aides who had been involved in Middle East diplomacy. They said that these contacts were approved by Mr. Kissinger even though Mr. Kissinger specifically denied having approved allowing Mr. Sheehan access to classified records of conversations held with Middle East leaders.

In a brief interview today, Mr. Kissinger said: "I did not authorize it."

"Those who did it committed a gross breach of confidence and a gross error of judgment," he added. He said he was "thunderstruck" to see the material in print.

The revelations in the Kissinger exchanges with Middle East leaders did not provide any major surprises, but rather were illustrative of Mr. Kissinger's negotiating techniques and policies, which have been extensively reported upon in the past.

The most significant assertion by Mr. Sheehan, a longtime writer on Middle East affairs, was that former President Richard M. Nixon had told Arab leaders during a tour of the area in June 1974 that the United States favored the return by Israel of all Egyptian territory and the "substantial restitution" of Syrian and Jordanian lands captured during the 1967 war.

According to Mr. Sheehan, who gave no source for his statement, Mr. Nixon told President Anwar el-Sadat of Egypt "that the American objective in the Sinai was to restore the old Egyptian international border."

"Kissinger was sitting there when Nixon said it," the article said. "Afterward, also in Kissinger's presence, the President informed President Hafez al Assad and King Hussein respectively that the United States favored the substantial restitution of the 1967 frontiers on the Golan Heights and on the West Bank of the Jordan within the framework of a general peace."

According to the article, President Ford "reaffirmed Nixon's position on the 1967 frontiers to Sadat last June in Salzburg."

Since the October 1973 war the United States has refrained from stating its position on the "final" Middle East frontiers that might develop as the result of a peace settlement.

Prior to that war, the United States had proposed that there only be "insubstantial alterations" in the pre-June 1967 borders. Any promise to Mr. Sadat that the United States favored Egypt's getting all his land back would represent a marked change.

State Department officials said privately today that they believed that Mr. Sheehan's comments on the final borders were based on Mr. Sadat's interpretation of deliberately ambiguous comments made to him by Mr. Nixon and Mr. Ford that expressed sympathy with his desire for the recovery of all the occupied land but no commitment to help him fulfill it.

Foreign Policy magazine said that Mr. Sheehan's article was based on conversations with numerous sources in Washington and in the Middle East and "should not be considered an official or 'authorized' version from any single side."

But for those familiar with the Middle East diplomacy, the most interesting aspects of the article were the fragments of what the forward said was "verbatim between participants." Mr. Kissinger, in the interview, said "these things are not verbatim, but obviously someone has read to the author from memos of conversation."

Later the State Department said that "insofar as Mr. Sheehan was briefed on the basis of any of our records of conversation, this represented a gross violation of confidence and was not authorized by the Secretary."

"The Secretary has said many times, in many other cases, that we respect the confidentiality of diplomatic conversations," it said. "The conduct of our diplomacy depends upon others having confidence that what they say to us will remain private. That remains our firm policy."

Mr. Sheehan in telephone conversations from his home in Cambridge, Mass., steadfastly refused to discuss his sources for specific points in the article or to say how he got the dialogue material.

President, in Illinois, Proposes Doubling Individual Exemption in Inheritance Tax

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON
Special to The New York Times

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., March 5—President Ford proposed here today that Congress more than double, to $150,000, the amount of an individual's estate that is exempted from Federal inheritance taxes. The exemption is now $60,000.

The President outlined the proposal in a campaign trip across the central Illinois farm belt in search of support for his candidacy in the state's March 16 Republican Presidential primary.

He told 400 members of farm organizations at a forum here that the estate tax change, combined with an Administration plan, announced earlier, to defer payment of inheritance taxes on farm lands for up to 25 years, would help end "forced liquidation" of family farms.

Includes All Estates

White House officials accompanying Mr. Ford said that the increase in the estate exemption would apply to all estates. They said that if Congress approved, the new exemption limit would take effect over five years, eventually reducing Government revenues by $1.1 billion a year.

According to some independent tax authorities, Mr. Ford's proposal could cost at least twice what the White House estimated. Some members of Congress have discussed the possibility of raising the estate exemption to $130,000 and estimated that it could cost $2 billion.

The President said the Treasury Department would present a detailed proposal to Congress later this month.

Estate taxes were no problem for farmers until a few years ago, but now they are making it increasingly difficult for farm families to keep their land. Inflated land prices have pushed up the value of inherited farms to the point that many have to be sold to pay death taxes.

One farm expert estimates that a farmer earning $10,000 to $12,000 a year typically leaves an estate valued at $320,000, and a farm publication projects that 200,000 to 400,000 farms a year will disappear over the next 20 years if present trends continue.

"I want to maintain the continuity of our family farms," Mr. Ford told a "farm forum" meeting arranged in a Springfield hotel by Representative Paul Findley, Republican of Illinois. "Too much labor and love go into the development of a paying farm to dismantle it with every new generation."

His appearance before members of 10 farm groups here, to be followed tomorrow by a visit to a working farm near Urbana, marked the beginning of an attempt by the President to overcome lingering strong resentment among Middle Western farmers over the embargo he imposed for three months last year on grain sales to the Soviet Union.

Defending the temporary embargo, Mr. Ford said that it had helped to obtain from Moscow a five-year agreement under which the Russians pledged to purchase at least six million tons of American grain each year.

"As soon as we got the agreement we wanted, I ordered the temporary halt lifted," he said.

He said that at the time he imposed the embargo last summer—in the face of demands by union longshoremen, which Mr. Ford did not mention—American grain farmers had already benefited from the purchase of 10 million tons of wheat and corn by the Soviet Union.

No Shipping

"If we had sold the Russians one more bushel of corn or wheat at that time, it couldn't have moved for months," he said contending that all available shipping was in use.

Since the embargo was lifted in October, the Russians have bought three million tons more, less than farmers had hoped to export and at prices many farmers charged were deflated from what they could have earned before the embargo.

Although Mr. Ford was applauded and hailed by the farmers for his remarks, several in his audience suggested they would remain wary about his Administration.

One farmer told the President good-naturedly, "I'd like to compliment you on being so well versed on agriculture problems. This comes as a complete surprise."

Another farmer asked, more seriously, how food producers could "believe the Administration" when it advocated a free market.

Mr. Ford said the chances were "virtually nil" that he would ever intervene with another export embargo, but that "I can't say never, under no circumstances" because he had to preserve that option in case of an unforeseen "catastrophe."

The President's defense of his agricultural policies was sandwiched between a speech to 3,000 persons, mostly schoolchildren, from the steps of Abraham Lincoln's Springfield home and a question forum tonight before 8,000 students at Bradley University in Peoria.

At the university, Mr. Ford replied indirectly but unmistakably to the sharp criticism of his foreign policy made in Florida by Ronald Reagan, his rival for the Republican nomination.

The United States "has not got the short end of the stick" in its negotiations with the Soviet Union, "despite what some critics have said," Mr. Ford declared.

Pursuing Agreement

He said he would continue to pursue a strategic arms agreement with Moscow because the world could ill afford "an open thermonuclear arms race." He said that critics of his diplomatic policy "haven't been in the ball game." "They have lots of rhetoric. I don't think they understand the problems," he added.

At the university, Mr. Ford declined a student's request that he outline his position on civil rights for homosexuals. Seemingly surprised by the question, he called it a "new and serious problem."

"I always try to be an understanding person as far as people are concerned who are different from myself," Mr. Ford said. But he added that it would be "dishonest" of him to try, without having thought it through, "to give you a pat answer tonight."

The White House played down the President's attitude toward Mr. Reagan's criticism and, despite Mr. Ford's expressions of confidence that he would win a "tough fight" in Illinois, he concentrated today on wooing the farm vote.

The President also announced, in what aides acknowledged was largely a cosmetic move, that he was establishing a new Cabinet-level Agricultural Policy Committee to be headed by Earl L. Butz, the Secretary of Agriculture.

Aides said the new committee would supplant two Administration boards previously set up by Mr. Ford, both of which have largely completed their principal tasks. They are the Economic Policy Board-National Security Council Food Committee, and the International Food Review Group.

Reagan Declares He's in Race to the

By JON NORDHEIMER
Special to The New York Times

VENICE, Fla., March 5—Ronald Reagan campaigned down the West Coast of Florida today and reassured supporters at shopping center malls and retirement villages that a defeat in next Tuesday's primary would not force him to abandon his challenge to President Ford.

"Some people have been suggesting I drop out of the race," he said at an outdoor rally in Sarasota, as a thunderhead boiled over the peninsula's interior.

"No! No!" shouted back some members of the shirt-sleeve crowd that had waited in the heat and humidity of the Gulf Gate Mall parking lot to hear him speak.

"After what I've seen in Florida," he continued, "and meeting all of you, I'm in it all the way!"

The crowd yelled approval, and the former Governor of California began another round of attacks on the Ford Administration, with emphasis on what he called the nation's lapse into second rate military status as a result of the policies of the President and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

Since his return to the state yesterday, Mr. Reagan has at every stop promoted the idea that a defeat in the Florida primary Tuesday would be only a temporary setback in his long march to wrest the nomination from Mr. Ford at the Republican convention in Kansas City next August.

Reagan Aides Worried

The depth of the shift in momentum to Mr. Ford in Florida—once considered a bulwark of support for the Californian—is not yet clear. But the fact that it has occurred at all is deeply disturbing to the Reagan camp and has prompted a change in tactics that may eventually decide this contest.

The first step has been to attack the President and his policies directly and to expand on the theme that détente with the Soviet Union is sapping the military strength of the country.

The second step has been to downgrade the importance of Florida in Mr. Reagan's challenge. While he said that unlike some of his supporters, he had never had any "illusions" about his strength in the state and had long recognized that as the primary date approached attitudes among Republican voters would polarize.

"I think it has been the strategy of the Ford ers," he said at Rolli in Winter Park has "that there is great importance put on primary. Now there an unnatural impor someone came along the boards. That devastating to an

Carter Charges Jackson With Lies and Distortions

By JAMES T. WOOTEN
Special to The New York Times

TAMPA, Fla., March 5—After his canvassers found recent erosion among his supporters, Jimmy Carter dramatically altered the tone of his Florida campaign today by accusing Senator Henry M. Jackson of using lies, distortions and scare tactics to enhance his own Presidential pursuit.

"He wants to be President so much, he is departing from his usual truthfulness," the former Georgia Governor said, responding to allegations by the Senator that he advocated a weakened national defense and espoused tax laws that would bankrupt large numbers of Americans.

The charges and countercharges not only highlighted the Democratic campaign here today but also reflected the increased pressures on the candidates' campaigns and the heightened importance of Florida to their respective dreams.

Until they both won surprising victories in primary elections a week apart—Mr. Carter in New Hampshire, Senator Jackson in Massachusetts—neither had paid much attention to the other.

Much of their campaign fire here was at first directed at Gov. George Wallace, of Alabama the only other Democratic candidate who is actively campaigning in Florida.

Now, however, the stakes for Mr. Carter and Senator Jackson are much higher and each speech, each advertisement, each handshake has increased in importance. Thus, Mr. Carter's voice rose proportionately today before a political club in Tallahassee.

"He [Senator Jackson] is deliberatlsely falsiying what I have said . . . just to scare people," he told an audience of about 300 members and guests of the Tiger Bay Club. "Our voters have enough sense to make decisions without being misled."

With fire in his eyes and anger in his drawl, the usually soft-spoken Mr. Carter surprised many who had grown accustomed to his restrained, almost pastoral rhetoric of love and compassion over the last few weeks.

An aide said after the speech, "He's tired and he's tired of being attacked by Jackson." But Jody Powell, Mr. Carter's press secretary, and Hamilton Jordan, his national campaign manager, offered another explanation.

"We found some slippage in our canvasses among people who were already favorable to Jimmy," Mr. Powell said.

"And most of it was related to the defense and tax things," Mr. Jordan explained.

Senator Jackson, in Tallahassee recently, described Mr. Carter's views on national defense as not in the country's best interest. "He would weaken rather than strengthen us," the Senator said.

Mr. Carter has proposed cuts in military spending that amount to about 5 percent of the present defense budget, while urging increased military competence and efficiency.

Today, he bristled noticeably as he recounted his military service—11 years in the Navy—and spoke of his willingness "to die for my country." Senator Jackson's charges, he said were "ridiculous, bordering on the absurd."

Recently, new radio commercials for Senator Jackson have begun to describe Mr. Carter's position on tax reform as a real threat to the solvency of middle-and lower-class home owners.

Today, Mr. Carter said that his consideration of an elimination of the mortgage-interest deductions on Federal income tax was but one facet of a "sweeping tax reform" that would result in a progressive but lower tax rate and would shift the tax burden of the country to those "who can best afford it."

"I don't want to see anybody distort my position on it [tax reform] just to frighten people," he said. "I can't sit back quietly and allow that to happen."

So, today, Mr. Carter did not sit back quietly.

Jackson Broadens Attack

Special to The New York Times

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., March 5—Senator Jackson of Washington broadened his attacks on Mr. Carter, today, accusing him of favoring a "weak defense."

Addressing a luncheon meeting, in this Navy-oriented city, of the Bull Snort Forum, a local nonpartisan political discussion group, Mr. Jackson declared that Mr. Carter had said in Miami that he favored cutting the defense budget by at least $15 billion.

"And then he comes to Jacksonville and says he's for a strong Navy," the Senator went on. "He says he'd only close bases overseas. Who's he kidding?"

Today as he stumped through Palm Beach, Jacksonville, Boca Raton and Tampa, the Senator also reiterated his criticism of Mr. Carter's plan on taxes on private homes.

Carter Is Praised by Auto Workers Chief

By R. W. APPLE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., March 5—"I like a man who has the courage to discuss the simple verities," said Leonard Woodcock. "I like a man who can say with simple grace, 'God bless you.' We need a man with vision to pull this country together."

Sitting beside Mr. Woodcock, the president of the politically powerful United Automobile Workers union, was the man to whom he referred: former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia.

Although the labor leader made it clear that he implied no endorsement by his praise, his appearance with Mr. Carter before more than 500 Pinellas County Democrats here last night was nonetheless a highly significant moment in the former Governor's Presidential drive.

Support for Others

Mr. Carter has been taking some heavy criticism recently from the liberal establishment within the Democratic Party, and there is no one with better credentials in such quarters than Mr. Woodcock. In addition, Mr. Woodcock left open the possibility of a later endorsement, which could prove important in such states as Ohio and Michigan.

The auto workers provided crucially needed manpower and organizational guidance to Mr. Carter in Iowa, where he won a major victory in the Jan. 19 precinct caucuses. In this state, the union endorsed him months ago.

"That was a made-in-Florida endorsement," Mr. Woodcock commented, "not in made-in-Detroit endorsement."

A number of auto workers officials, including Steven Schlossberg, the general counsel, had backed Senator Birch Bayh of Indiana. When Mr. Bayh abandoned the race yesterday, many of the union officials switched to Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona. A few officials, notably Ken Bannon, are supporting Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington, but he is believed less palatable to Mr. Woodcock because of his hawkishness on Vietnam and other issues.

In an interview, Mr. Woodcock said he had spoken by telephone yesterday with Mr. Udall. He also conferred at a local motel with Mr. Carter for more than an hour—the first time he had met the Georgian. In neither case, he said, did he offer the union's support.

Asked his reaction to Mr. Carter, Mr. Woodcock heistated for a moment, then answered: "I was impressed."

The attention paid the auto workers' chief is part of a low-key struggle going on behind the scenes as public attention focuses on Tuesday's Florida primary. Mr. Udall is attempting to establish himself as the sole candidate of liberals, and Mr. Carter is trying to demonstrate that he has support in all segments of the Democratic Party.

One of the Georgian's problems with organized labor is his stand on right-to-work laws, which guarantee that no worker will be required to join a labor union. He has said again and again that he would sign a repeal of such laws, but would not mount a "crusade" for repeal.

"I'm not worried about that," Mr. Woodcock commented. "It's hardly the most crucial issue facing us."

No Magic With Muskie

In 1960 and 1964, the auto workers stayed out of pre-convention politics, but four years ago Mr. Woodcock backed Senator Edmund S. Muskie of Maine. His lack of success in that venture, Mr. Woodcock conceded, "makes me wonder whether my endorsement has any magic."

This year, the U.A.W. has banded together with other unions, including the Communications Workers of America and the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, in a liberal labor caucus. Their goal has been the election of delegates to the Democratic National Convention, not the promotion of any one candidate.

Mr. Jackson has been fighting a rear-guard action to keep auto workers' backing from his rivals. He sent word to Mr. Woodcock a few weeks ago objecting to Mr. Woodcock's plans to appear with Mr. Carter last night. Some other officials of the union also opposed it.

But an important strategic consideration lay behind the joint appearance. Mr. Woodcock was mortified in 1972 when Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama won the primary in Michigan, the state where the auto workers have worked for decades to liberalize the political climate.

He is entered there again this year, and a loss to Mr. Carter in Florida might, according to some reckonings, make him easier to handle in Michigan on May 18.

Miss Krupsak Favors Talk of Her Nomination

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 5—Mary Anne Krupsak said today that "I do not discourage speculation" that she might be nominated for the Vice Presidency by the Democrats this year.

Miss Krupsak was asked about the possibility of her nomination following a speech before the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs.

Although Miss Krupsak, the New York Lieutenant Governor, said she did not intend to "make a statement" on the matter at this time, her remarks went further than she ever has before on the issue of the Vice-Presidential nomination.

Miss Krupsak said that she thought "it's a healthy sign" that "people in both major political parties" are talking about the possibility of nominating a woman for Vice President. The talk is important, she continued, because "society in general has to feel that women are ready for the highest offices" before they will actually be nominated and elected.

Women in Philadelphia Win Police Patrol Fight

PHILADELPHIA, March 5 (AP)—The Philadelphia police department has agreed to hire 100 women by the end of the year for assignment as beat patrol officers.

The decision was reached Tuesday in United States District Court as part of a settlement in a sex-discrimination suit against the 8,200-member department.

The city plans to study the women's performance in the previously all-male assignment and report back to the court in 1978.

r. Alexander said that in the 28th district, the board had affidavits from four persons whose names were affixed to Wallace petitions swearing that they had never signed the petitions.

A Jackson campaign official, Terry O'Connell, said that there are many other such potential frauds on the Wallace petitions.

Wallace delegate slates have been removed from the ballot, pending final court decision, in the 2nd Congressional District in Suffolk and the 10th, 12th and 14th Districts in New York City.

New York has one of the most difficult qualification procedures for delegate candidates. A slate must have the signatures of at least 1,250 enrolled Democrats in a Congressional district to qualify for the ballot. In practice, twice that many are collected to insure against challenges.

Trouble for Udall

Representative Udall described the New York petition system as "crazy" Wednesday as he explained why his campaign workers were able to field delegate slates in only two-thirds of the New York districts.

Another Presidential contender, Jimmy Carter, former Governor of Georgia, is also the target of widespread challenges by the Jackson forces, but these are based largely on irregularities rather than fraud.

As a result, two Carter slates have been tentatively removed by the Board of Elections in the 27th and 33rd Districts upstate. The Carter forces, like many of the Wallace delegates, are appealing the board action in court.

Officials of the Wallace campaign in New York and Montgomery, Ala., were unavailable for comment.

Ford Nominates Two Men To the Federal Court Here

President Ford has nominated Federal Magistrate Gerard L. Goettel and Charles S. Haight Jr., an admiralty lawyer, to be judges of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York.

The nominations have been sent to the Senate. If confirmed, the two men will succeed Arnold Bauman, who resigned in August 1974 to become a partner in the law firm of Shearman & Sterling, and Murray I. Gurfein, who was elevated to the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in September 1974.

DEMOCRATS ALTER WISCONSIN VOTE

It Will Be Binding Primary Same Day as New York's

By CHARLES MOHR
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 5—The Democratic Party stretched its own rules today to make the Wisconsin Presidential primary election on April 6 a binding test that will select 68 national convention delegates as well as serving as a popularity contest for Presidential candidates.

The move could help Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona, a leading liberal candidate, by giving him a chance to win a meaningful primary on the same day that New York State holds a primary election in which Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington is believed to have a strong position.

But one disturbed Democrat called the Wisconsin decision an example of "selective enforcement" of party rules and said it could prove to be a "Pearl Harbor" for the entire liberal wing of the party if Mr. Udall's strength in Wisconsin has been overestimated.

The Democratic Compliance Review Commission voted 18 to 5—against the advice of its own staff and legal advisers—to reverse an earlier ruling that the Wisconsin primary would be a so-called "beauty contest." The earlier ruling was based on the state Legislature's refusal to pass a law bringing the primary into compliance with Democratic Party rules.

Crossover Voting Stays

The Wisconsin Assembly voted 60 to 36 today to comply partly with Democratic Party rules by allotting national convention delegates proportionally to candidates on the basis of their popular vote rather than letting the winner take all delegates as in the past. The State Senate is expected to act on the bill next week.

But the Assembly did not vote to end the traditional Wisconsin practice of crossover voting in which a Republican can vote in the Democratic primary and vice versa.

Today's decision could have a direct, perhaps major, impact on the contest for the Democratic Presidential nomination.

In the New Hampshire and Massachusetts primaries Mr. Udall emerged as the apparent leader among liberal contenders. Senator Jackson, former Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter and Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace are strong among the moderate and conservative voters.

Liberals on the rules compliance body voted to make the Wisconsin primary binding—but were joined by supporters of Governor Wallace and Mr. Carter.

"It is very difficult to justify what we did today," said one Democratic source. "Udall needed a primary he could win and there is no question that some liberals voted the way they did today in the hope of getting a headline in Wisconsin on April 6 to mitigate a Jackson victory in New York the same day."

The liberal expectation could backfire, however. A Milwaukee Journal poll published Wednesday showed Mr. Wallace ahead with 25 percent of those polled, Mr. Jackson second with 18 percent, and Mr. Udall fourth with only 9 percent.

Udall Camp Hopeful

The same poll indicated that total conservative and liberal sentiment was about equally divided at the time the polling was done in early February.

A spokesman for Mr. Udall said, "Our organization in Wisconsin is the best we have any place in the nation" and expressed the hope that Wisconsin could serve again as a liberal springboard as it did in 1972 for George McGovern.

Mr. Udall said in a statement that "progressive Democrats across the nation should be heartened" by today's decision and that without it a "bastion of Democratic Party progressivism would have lost much of its significance."

However, some other analysts thought Governor Wallace, who got 22 percent of the vote in 1972, might win Wisconsin and that it was not impossible that Mr. Jackson could do so. If the latter happened, it would virtually kill liberal hopes to select a nominee this year, one Democrat said.

Gov. Patrick J. Lucey, who came to Washington to argue for the move, said that Mr. Udall "has a lot of work to do" to win Wisconsin.

Until today's vote the plan had been for the primary to be a beauty contest only with the state's 68 delegates to be selected in county and Congressional district caucuses. Mr. Udall might have won many more delegates in caucuses than he could win in a binding primary, but a victory now would have greater psychological impact.

Senate Democrats Seek Leaders' Jobs

By RICHARD L. MADDEN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 5—The maneuvering among Senate Democrats to choose new leaders next January intensified today as active contests developed for the party's two top Senate leadership posts.

A day after Mike Mansfield of Montana, the majority leader for the last 15 years, announced that he would not seek re-election, at least three Democrats began getting in touch with their colleagues to try to line up support for the majority leader's post.

They were Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, the majority whip, who is regarded as the early front-runner to succeed Mr. Mansfield; Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, who was seeking to rally liberal Democrats, and Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina, a moderate Southerner who could draw support from both Mr. Byrd and Mr. Muskie.

A fourth Democrat, Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota, was described by an aide as having a "very serious interest" in the post. But the aide said that Mr. Humphrey did not plan an active campaign to line up support now.

2 Seek to Be Whip

At the same time, two other Democrats — Senators Alan Cranston of California and Frank E. Moss of Utah—announced that they would seek the majority whip's post now held by Mr. Byrd. Mr. Cranston, a liberal, said he was "very pleased" at the expressions of support he had received from other senators. The leaders will be chosen by incumbent and newly elected Democratic senators at a party caucus just before the new Congress convenes in January. Several senators said today that it could be some time—perhaps not until after the party national nominating convention in July and the November Senate elections—before a clear picture emerged of the likely winners.

"I think it's far from being locked up," Mr. Hollings said. He added that in between committee meetings yesterday and today, "I've been doing some calling and visiting" with Democratic colleagues.

Mr. Muskie, according to an aide, began last night calling all his fellow Democrats to let them know of his interest in the leadership.

Byrd Gets Support

In an interview in an anteroom off the Senate chamber, where he closely directs the day-to-day operations of the Senate, Mr. Byrd said that eight senators approached him yesterday to express their support and others did the same today.

"I'll call some others," he said. "Other aspirants are making calls and I did, too."

Senator Byrd, who is seeking re-election to the Senate in November, also is an announced candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination, though it is widely regarded as an effort to hold the West Virginia delegation together for possible leverage at the party's national convention in New York in July.

Mr. Byrd said he would continue to seek both the majority leadership as well as the Presidential nomination.

"These two need not conflict," he said. "One will be decided in July, the other next January."

By Dropping Out

Under the Democratic caucus rules, the balloting first for majority leader and then majority whip will continue for each post until one senator achieves a majority vote of the caucus, and after each ballot the contender with the fewest votes is dropped.

For example, if there are 60 Democratic senators in the new Congress, it would take 31 votes in the caucus to be elected to one of the leadership posts.

An uncertainty in the early jockeying for support is the number and the political leanings of the senators who will be elected in November.

Of the 33 Senate seats up for election this year, 22 are now held by Democrats, including Harry F. Byrd Jr., independent of Virginia, who votes with the Democrats. So far, four of these 22 incumbents have announced that they will not seek re-election. They are Senators Mansfield, Philip A. Hart of Michigan, John O. Pastore of Rhode Island and Stuart Symington of Missouri.

10 Democrats Enter Race in Connecticut For 51 Delegates

Special to The New York Times

HARTFORD, March 5—Ten candidates were certified today for the Connecticut Democratic Presidential primary on May 11, the first in the state's history.

The primary will determine the percentage of Connecticut's 51 national convention delegates that each candidate will get. But a long process has to be followed before the national delegates are named.

The certifications were made by William A. O'Neill, the Democratic state chairman, at a capitol news conference here.

Those certified for the primary are Senator Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia, Senator Frank Church of Idaho, former Senator Fred R. Harris of Oklahoma, Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington, Ellen McCormack of Long Island, an anti-abortion candidate, Gov. Milton Shapp of Pennsylvania, Sargent Shriver, the Democratic Vice-President candidate in 1972, Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona and Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama.

A candidate's name will not be on the Presidential ballot in a community unless he has a pledged slate of local delegates in that community.

"The candidates must be represented by slates of local delegates in order to actually participate in the primaries," Mr. O'Neill said.

The primary will determine the percentage of local delegates each Presidential candidate will have in six Congressional district conventions on June 12. These conventions will name Connecticut's 51 delegates to the national convention in July.

Roberts, California political special- who was called into Florida direct the Ford campaign. all measures, Mr. Ford doing splendidly with the rly voters. A statewide poll in January by Paul Cohen Florida Opinion Research Inc. found Mr. Ford well ahead of Mr. Reagan among the older voters. Here in Pinellas County, a Republican stronghold and an area where more than half of the registered Republicans are past retirement age, a St. Petersburg Times study showed Mr. Ford the favorite among the elderly by a margin of nearly 3 to 1 over Mr. Reagan, the former Governor of California.

In Massachusetts last Tuesday, Mr. Ford beat Mr. Reagan by 81 percent to 15 percent among voters 65 and older, according to The New York Times/CBS News survey of primary voters who had just cast their ballots. The President took only 62 percent of the total vote.

Exactly why Mr. Ford scores so well with the elderly is something of a mystery to the experts.

Virtually all surveys taken in recent years show the elderly in Florida, as elsewhere, to be more conservative than the norm. The New York Times/CSB News surveys in New Hampshire and Massachusetts found older voters less favorable toward Government job guarantees than are those younger, more opposed to détente with the Soviet Union, more against legalized abortion and more likely to believe that the Government was giving too much aid to blacks.

Reagan Views Supported

In other words, on the campaign issues, the elderly tend to side with Mr. Reagan.

Moreover, Mr. Cohen's poll showed that 80 percent of the elderly Republican voters in Florida believed that Mr. Reagan had "the personality a President ought to have," while only 59 percent believed that Mr. Ford did. Mr. Cohen also found that 37 percent of Republicans 65 and older believed that Mr. Reagan could "end the nation's economic difficulties," while only 25 percent thought Mr. Ford could.

L. E. Thomas, Mr. Reagan's Florida campaign chairman, acknowledged in a telephone interview that Mr. Ford was ahead among the older Republicans. Mr. Thomas attributed the President's lead to Mr. Ford's "distortion of what Governor Reagan has said about Social Security."

Mr. Ford has contended that Mr. Reagan has proposed steps that would jeopardize Social Security benefits, a contention that Mr. Reagan denies.

Other experienced analysts say, however, that the most plausible explanation for Mr. Ford's success in wooing the elderly is the tendency of older persons to feel more comfortable with the status quo than with change.

Late Start for Jackson

As for the Democrats, Senator Jackson's apparent success in rallying support among older voters seems to be due primarily to his organizational strength. Mr. Jackson began his campaign in Florida late, well behind Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama and former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia, and the Senator has concentrated his efforts in Florida almost exclusively on the high-rise condominiums that line the East Coast.

There are more than 750 such condominiums. In them live more than 200,000 people, virtually all of them retired and most of them Democrats. Some of the buildings are so large that they form voting precincts all by themselves.

Senator Jackson has the endorsement of the Dade County Council for Senior Citizens, which has provided him with lists of potential voters and helped him set up telephone banks and organization captains. Mr. Jackson visited three condominiums yesterday and has scheduled several others for the weekend.

Mayor Maurice Ferré of Miami, Senator Jackson's Florida campaign chairman, said that the Senator was counting on winning twice as many votes as any other Democratic candidate among the elderly voters. Even if he does that well, it might not be enough to move Mr. Jackson past Mr. Wallace and Mr. Carter, but it would give him a strong third-place finish.

Senator Jackson also concentrated on winning the elderly vote in the Massachusetts primary, and, according to The New York Times/CBS News survey, he was enormously successful. He won 42 percent of the elderly vote in Massachusetts, the survey showed, better than three times that of any other Democrat, and 15 percent of his total vote came from persons 65 and older.

The New York Times/Con Keyes

Carolyn Anderson and Becky Simmons, researchers, sort garbage from Tucson dump

Sifting Through Garbage For Clues on American Life

Special to The New York Times

TUCSON, Ariz., March 5—As far as Dr. William L. Rathje and his 60 student volunteers at the University of Arizona are concerned, you are what you throw away.

Six days a week Dr. Rathje, a 30-year-old associate professor of anthropology, and the students meet at the city dump, where they sift through 38 bags of garbage set aside for them each week by city sanitation workers.

Wearing surgical gowns, face masks and rubber gloves, the researchers sort it all out—paper goods here, cans and bottles there, table scraps, banana peels and the like in another place.

Anything that would identify the source of the refuse—letters, bills, envelopes—is separated and discarded. The object is not to gather intelligence, but to determine consumption habits of various income groups.

They work in a decidedly unpretentious laboratory—a 25-by-30-foot metal-roofed area stuck behind the neat rows of huge white dump trucks. There are makeshift tables, each surrounded by white-jacketed volunteers. They open each tagged plastic bag with care and remove its contents piece by piece.

"Wilson, what do marshmallows come under?"

"Candy."

Wilson is Wilson Hughes, project straw boss. He is here six days a week, supervising groups of volunteers. Fridays are especially good days—more volunteers show up. Each volunteer has a plastic-covered code card. Each food and trash item has an assigned number. On clipboards, the students record each item contained in their bag, by code and brand.

"Hey, look here," Dr. Rathje called out. "An entire cooked steak."

"Anybody wear this size shoes?" a student asked, holding up what looked like a perfectly good pair of doeskins.

College Background

"People really throw out good stuff sometimes," Dr. Rathje said. "I don't know why. Maybe they're just too lazy to take them to Goodwill or somewhere."

An old blue school bus is parked alongside the research area. "Hotel du Garbage" it says above the door. All the gowns and boxes of rubber gloves and scales used to weigh the vegetable peelings, meat scraps and stale bread are kept inside.

Judy Colvocoresses, Carolyn Anderson and Becky Simmons are working at one table. Miss Colvocoresses is majoring in anthropology, Miss Anderson in dietetics and Miss Simmons in chemistry.

"Yeah, I know," Miss Simmons said. "People always look at me like that when I say chemistry. I like this because it's so different from chemistry and I've learned so much about people's consumption patterns."

"It's kind of fun and different to do," Miss Anderson added, "and it gets me away from the campus."

No Background Interest

Were any of them particularly noted for their eagerness to take out the garbage at home? "No" and "No way" and "Yuk." Nor are they any more eager these days—less, in fact. "It does make you more conscious of what you throw away, and how you throw it away," Miss Anderson said. "I wouldn't want anybody going through my garbage."

Work was halted momentarily by a snack-bar truck and its horn, which plays "La Cucaracha," which of course means "the cockroach." The volunteers ate with abandon as all around them continued sorting garbage.

Suzy Allen, one of the technicians on project.

One day soon the research group will dedicate the garbage-study area with a champagne christening. "But I want to wait until we get our garbage T-shirts in for this year," Dr. Rathje said.

What the students are doing is not exactly new methodology to anthropologists and archeologists. They have been examining the discards of ancient cultures for years to determine how the people lived. It was that practice, in fact, that led two of Dr. Rathje's students to wonder in 1971 whether they could test a classic stereotype—that Mexican-Americans drank less milk, took fewer vitamins and provided their children with less that is educational than the more affluent "Anglo" middle class.

Two Areas Checked

The professor and his two students did their limited study by taking sample garbage from poor Mexican-American neighborhoods and middle-class Anglo areas and comparing contents. What they found shattered the stereotypes. Mexican-Americans drank as much milk or more, took more vitamins and bought more educational toys for their children than the across-town families.

Since then the garbage project has become an annual thing, involving not only anthropology students taking part for credit, but also students in medicine, sociology, home economics and psychology—and a scattering who, as one young student put it, find it relaxing.

The project has gained national academic recognition, the attention of the Department of Agriculture and the interest of marketing analysis concerns. This year it is operating under two foundation grants totaling $23,000, with much of its expenses paid by the university.

The fourth project year is now under way; statistical analysis of the third is still in the computers but some general observations already are available.

Projected from the 1,200 families of the survey area, which covers about a quarter of the city's geography and an income range from dirt-poor to upper-middle, Tucson's 400,000 people last year threw away more than 10,000 tons of edible food valued at $10 million to $12 million. That includes more than a half-million dollars worth of beef, well over $1 million in vegetables and $750,000 worth of pastries.

More Findings

They discarded enough aluminum cans to earn them about $300,000 at recycling plants and thousands of dollars more in recyclable paper.

The poor ate a lot less meat and other protein foods as inflation increased in 1975. All classes bought less beer last year than they did the year before when beer consumption went up sharply.

Dr. Rathje said that people reacted to the sugar shortage of 1975 the same way they did to the beef shortage of 1974—they bought more and wasted more.

According to the Rathje research, all the dogs in town would be well fed if they had access to the meat thrown out of the city's restaurants. That way, expensive pet-food containers would perhaps not be the fourth most common item in trash bags, right behind meat, bread and vegetables. And the poor seem to discard more newspapers than the middle class.

Middle-income families waste far more edible food than the poor, the study found. They either lack the time or the knowledge to reuse leftovers and stale pastries. The poor also buy fewer pre-prepared and frozen foods probably because they lack refrigeration facilities. Middle-income families also buy more giant-economy-size packages than the poor.

All sorts of ancillary projects have spun off the main garbage-sifting operation. One sociology student determined that beer consumption went up when there was a full moon. Another advanced the theory that beer drinkers consumed more over-the-counter drugs, such as aspirin, than liquor drinkers did.

An examination of the refuse thrown out by an elementary school showed that its cafeteria was obviously continuously serving food that the pupils patently disliked such as cole slaw. The project has recommended to the Agriculture Department's school-lunch program that school cafeterias provide choices in daily menus to cut down on waste. The department is interested.

Nor could mothers be heartened by the school survey. Large numbers of homemade sandwiches were found, many still wrapped.

There is a definite camaraderie in sorting garbage for science, Dr. Rathje reports. The student volunteers have formed softball, basketball and volleyball teams and hold championship playoffs with municipal sanitation employes every year.

A Halloween party last year invited guests to "come as your favorite piece of garbage." They did: an olive, a broken doll, a bag of fertilizer.

Dr. Rathje wants to expand the project next year even more if he can find the money to finance it. He wants to study discards by age group and attempt to determine how much of every dollar spent on food is thrown away.

When Anxious Over Decoratin Eight Heads Are Better Than O

By LISA HAMMEL

The five women sat on the floor earnestly discussing their problems, with occasional interruptions and suggestions from the leader.

Group therapy? No, group decorating.

"People have hang-ups when they decorate," said Julia Hyman, the leader and a professional decorator. "I had begun to realize that decorating is not just putting some furniture together; it's a whole emotional thing that requires some guidance."

She hit on the group idea two years ago when it occurred to her that in a group women are more apt to talk freely about those things that involve the nerve endings. And the group—all amateurs—not only act as an instant source of ideas, but also as morale boosters.

"The group is so supportive," said Adriane Berg, in whose apartment the women were meeting that night. "And you're in your own home, so they can look at everything and tell you things. You can't really describe these things to somebody; they have to be able to see it."

Hostess Client Concept

Each week the class meets in a different member's home. The hostess for the evening has generally thought out what she wants to have discussed, and is then the "client" for the evening.

"I try to get the group to ask questions I would ask myself," said Mrs. Hyman. "And I encourage them to fantasize."

The length of the course depends on how many people there are in it (never more than eight, and more than half the people in this particular group are second-time-arounders). Each woman gets visited at least once. The cost depends on the number of meetings.

"It averages out to about $7 a person for each meeting," Mrs. Hyman said.

Miss Berg knew exactly what was bothering her on a recent evening when she welcomed the group to the high-rise condominium she shares with her husband, Stuart Bochner (she uses her maiden name). She had come a long way, she explained, since she began the course with the group last fall, and had already half-furnished the living room in acres of white.

Now the problem was the master bedroom and dressing room. In spite of the fact that the apartment includes a well-closeted entry hall; a large, many-windowed, L-shaped living room, a good-sized kitchen with plenty of space for dining, and an unused second bedroom (the couple does not have children), "things have worked out so that we do all our living in this one room," Miss Berg explained to the group, which was seated in the master bedroom.

"We eat, sleep, watch TV, read, listen to stereo, do our crafts and even entertain small numbers of people in this room," she said. So, how does one get all those activities accommodated in one room not much more than about 10 by 20 feet?

Mental Visions

Mrs. Hyman believes in thinking big, and then scaling down to reality after the problems have been pinpointed. So the group began—mentally—to knock down walls, particularly the one between the virtually unused dressing room and the bedroom; take out the closets and build more efficient ones; move the furniture around, and install the big, free-standing television set in a wall recess.

There was no lack of ideas. But somehow, there was Miss Berg, sitting and shaking her head. Many of the ideas were good, she indicated. But there was still something lacking that would bring the whole thing together. What was it?

"Fantasize," said Mrs. Hyman. "There you are, naked with a checkbook. You can have whatever you want. What would it be?"

Miss Berg's large eyes lit up. Now that was clearly no problem.

"There would be a marvelous bed [the present one is a temporary item in white iron] with chintz and pillows, and a beautiful upholstered bench at its foot, and a wonderful portrait on the wall opposite.

"There would be a fireplace in the center of the room, and very comfortable seating all around it, and tons of closets—but all out of sight, and a place for my crafts, a sewing table with millions of tiny drawers, and maybe a sewing machine."

"And where would you put the television?" asked Mrs. Hyman.

"That's very simple," said Miss Berg. "You could enclose it with a door, and have bookcases on either side that would hold all my leather-bound books and my old maps."

"But no table and chairs," Mr. Bochner added (since the problem of eating in the room still had to be attended to). "Maybe a counter near the fireplace." He paused for the moment. "But if the fireplace doesn't do anything," he added, "you might as well have a wishing well in here."

It was quickly agreed that there was no way to actually have a real fireplace in the middle of a room on the second floor of a very tall building with no flues. And it finally became clear, after a good deal more batting-around of ideas, that what Miss Berg felt the room really lacked was a focal point.

By the time the group left, almost four hours after it had arrived, a great deal had been established.

No Fireplace

There wasn't going to be a fireplace, of course, but there was going to be a big comfortable sofa about where the wall of the dressing room now stood. There would be some sort of library table in back of it for dining. There would be books, and the recessed TV set along one wall, with a queen-size bed opposite, near the windows.

Where the dressing room now is, there would be new closets, lots of built-ins, big baskets for holding Miss Berg's needlepoint yarn, a portable sewing machine and a place in the crafts area to plop down and work if one didn't want to use the sofa.

Miss Berg seemed quite pleased. It didn't even seem as if it were going to cost that much money. But Miss Berg is not the only who has been satisfied the group experience. cidentally, information a the groups can be go from Miss Hyman, at 8939).

The women who helped her solve her p lems that evening incl a neighbor, Donna Steinh who had come by to if the course would be m to her (her apartment is most identical to Berg's), and decided it questionably would be.

"I have definite ide Mrs. Steinhorn said, "but scared to go beyond w I've already done. My ap ment is all solid colors cause I'm afraid to buy chintzes and flowers I w I'm hoping this will bn down my defenses."

Barbara Krispel, who li in a brownstone apartme joined the course beca she said she thinks she n want to take up decorat as a profession.

"The group has opened a lot for me," she said. "I concept of interior decor ing was the icing on t cake. But I found out abo things like dealing with c penters and suppliers."

Elaine Freedman has liv in three different hom since she was married, a has never quite managed finish doing any of ther she said.

"Now I'm finally doing i I'm not very practical. M whole house is a fantas And before this course made some costly mistake because I hadn't been abi to think realistically. But thi class is getting me in touc with that."

Sheila Baird is furnishin a three-and-a-half room apartment. She didn't wan to use a decorator becaus she wanted the fun, as wel as experience, of doing herself.

"But I've always done h by intuition," she said, "and I wanted to learn some of the theory and basic premises. One of the things this does is to help you to articulate your objectives. You search your soul for what you really want. It's a little like one of those group therapy things," she added, with a small smile.

In Denmark, Child Custody Case Stirs a Major Dispute

By BERNARD WEINRAUB

Special to The New York Times

COPENHAGEN — Birgitte Jensen was born on June 26, 1972, but spent only three days with her parents. A social worker said that the infant's parents seemed unable to care for her, so the child was placed in an institution.

Last month Mr. and Mrs. Boerge Jensen kidnapped their daughter from the welfare home and fled to the office of Dr. Eva Graungaard, a 47-year-old physician who has campaigned against the misuse of authority by child welfare officials.

"It is a scandal, the worst kind of excess of the welfare state," said Dr. Graungaard. "The state says they are the big mother and father to everyone. The state says they know what's best for your children, and they can take your child away on the whim of a social worker."

The case of "Little Birgitte," as it is called here, has stirred a major dispute in Denmark and aroused widespread anger against the Government. Moreover it has shed light on a controversial practice that has emerged with the advent of Denmark's highly centralized welfare system, the power of officials to remove children from their homes, without court order or official sanction.

'Terrifying Authority'

In 1974 more than 9,000 children were removed from their parents' homes. Of these, about 500 were taken despite the objections of their parents. It is Dr. Graungaard's view that many of these removals were unjustified and an abuse of authority by welfare workers.

"These people have a terrifying authority," said Dr. Graungaard, the mother of 11 children, five of them adopted, mostly handicapped Korean youngsters.

"People who are three months out of university make a judgment about parents and the judgment is irreversible. Every week I get parents calling me, crying, crying, crying, wanting their children back.

"And the children, living in public institutions, have little chance in later life. Many of them end up in mental hospitals or prisons."

Denmark's 273 municipal child welfare boards are empowered to place a child in an institution on the advice of a welfare worker. According to Dr. Graungaard the decision of the welfare board can be appealed to a Social Appeals Board, but the initial decision is rarely reversed.

A Personal Contact

As a last resort, parents can go to the Appeals Court and finally the Supreme Court, but only with permission of the Ministry of Justice. Currently the Government has enacted legislation to merge the child welfare boards with the appeals unit, but critics say that the essential "abuse of authority" remains intact and an overhaul of the system is crucial.

Dr. Graungaard's involvement with child welfare authorities began in 1956, when she returned to Copenhagen for a Christmas holiday while studying medicine in Sweden. A woman phoned her and pleaded for help because authorities had taken away her child.

"I did not understand this problem but I said I would help her," Dr. Graungaard said. "I tried to reach her after Christmas Day but I couldn't. On New Year's we found her. She had taken her life."

Dr. Graungaard said that the case of "Little Birgitte" was typical, except that the parents had taken the extreme measure of "kidnapping" their child.

The child was born prematurely. The mother, although stated to be normally intelligent, has a partly paralyzed face, which led to the conclusion that she was retarded.

When the infant was due to go home, the hospital requested welfare officials to assist the mother. A welfare official declared that Mrs. Jensen was unable to care for the baby, after meeting the mother for the first time. The child was promptly taken away. The Jensens were only permitted three two-hour visits at the care house.

Psychiatric Report

What compounded the matter, said Dr. Graungaard, was that an official psychiatrist upheld the report of the social worker without meeting the mother. Two independent psychiatrists have since contested the report.

Despite a municipal order to arrest the parents for seizing their child, sympathetic police have refused to enter Dr. Graungaard's home.

Dr. Eva Graungaard is fighting actions of child welfare officials.

Mills Makes It Final: He Won't Run Again

Toppled from his Congressional power by alcoholism and public incidents with a striptease dancer, Representative Wilbur D. Mills called it quits yesterday and said he would not run for a 20th term.

"I am not running away from a fight," the 66-year-old Arkansas Democrat said in a prepared statement that mentioned his problems with alcoholism but did not allude to Fanne Foxe, the Argentine enterainer who ran from his car in October 1974 and jumped into Washington's Tidal Basin. Mr. Mills subsequently appeared on stage with Miss Foxe in Boston.

Mr. Mills, the former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said: "I feel that I have won the greatest battle of my life in recognizing that I was assailed by the disease of alcoholism and in accepting the way of life that brought about my recovery from it."

Mr. Mills said he would devote the rest of his life to his family, to helping other alcoholics and to public service as a private citizen.

U.S. LEADERSHIP A WORRY TO BONN

Ford's Remarks on Detente Played Up Amid Talk of Washington 'Crisis'

By CRAIG R. WHITNEY
Special to The New York Times

BONN, March 5—The West German Government is worried about what Chancellor Helmut Schmidt sees as a leadership crisis in Washington, according to his close aides. They say that he was also mildly annoyed at President Ford for appearing to cast doubt on the Western policies of détente in a campaign interview last Monday.

Mr. Schmidt shared his concern with the French President, Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, when the two European leaders last met near Nice in mid-February. And he has talked about it openly during Cabinet meetings in Bonn.

Reflecting these views, Finance Minister Hans Apel flew back from the Nice meeting talking of a "crisis" in the United States. Mr. Apel spoke of Congress and the Administration "tearing each other apart" over past abuses by the Central Intelligence Agency, and paralyzing United States foreign policy in Angola, according to two officials.

What makes the West German Government especially sensitive to Mr. Ford's campaign comments about détente is that in this country, too, 1976 is an election year. Mr. Schmidt's test at the polls will come on Oct. 3, and his Christian Democratic opposition is already using the alleged failures of détente as a powerful issue against him.

Angola an Upsetting Factor

So reports of Mr. Ford's remark to a Florida television interviewer last Monday—"I don't use the word détente any more," he said—set off a wave of nervousness, speculation and campaign talk here about whether American foreign policy might be changing direction.

"The big psychological upsetting factor was Angola, and the direct Soviet intervention there," a West German diplomat said. 'The discussion here about whether President Ford had abandoned détente was a tempest in a teapot, but it really caused trouble."

West Germany, unlike some other North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies, strongly supported the American view that Cuban and Soviet intervention in the Angola conflict could threaten the security of all southern Africa, and the South*east Atlantic sea* lanes as well. Nearly all of Western Europe's oil comes by ship past the West African coast.

Western European calls for more leadership from Washington often coincide with fears about Western Europe's own security. And in this election year in West Germany, a fundamental change of course in American foreign policy—away from détente—would leave the Government in isolation.

Mr. Ford's television statement on détente was, therefore, the top news item in all the West German newspapers, and discussions about it have followed every day since. What the President said was that "peace through strength" was a better description of his policy than "détente," but the headlines here read, "Ford Rejects Détente."

The Christian Democrats' foreign policy spokesman, Werner Marx, called the President's remarks "the sign of a considerable correction in American hopes and expectations for détente."

Mr. Schmidt and his Cabinet met on Wednesday and got the text of what Mr. Ford actually said. According to a Government spokesman, Armin Grunewald, they concluded that he hadn't really changed policy at all—he had just used different words to describe it.

"What annoyed Schmidt," another officia said, "was the political argument that the President's remarks provoked here in West Germany. Mr. Ford appeared not to care much about the effect his campaign speeches have on his allies abroad. Was it really necessary?"

Détente is more than an abstract foreign-policy concept here: It is a flesh-and-blood issue of how West Germany deals with East Germany and the other allies of the Soviet Union right at its eastern border. It is a policy that can only be carried out with the presence of American troops on West German soil, and with firm knowledge of support in Washington.

Airplane Noise Challenged in Coast Case

By GLADWIN HILL
Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO—A little-noted suit pending in United States District Court here is looked to by environmental lawyers as the possible key to resolving a virtual governmental deadlock over reducing airplane noise.

According to Federal estimates, about one out of every 12 citizens lives in an area chronically subject to annoying and possibly injurious plane noise. In Los Angeles alone, suits against the city's International Airport over diminished property values and annoyance total several billion dollars.

In 1968, Congress told the Federal Aviation Agency to promulgate regulations to reduce noise, but few regulations have been issued and the problem has worsened.

Some lawyers accuse the Government of "foot-dragging" because of a fear of damage suits. Meanwhile, city and county efforts to restrict air traffic have been stalled by courts, which have ruled that such authority has been preempted by the Federal Government.

On the theory that cities and counties are only creatures of the state, California in 1972 tried to break the deadlock under state auspices.

It promulgated a two-tiered set of restrictions on airports' tacit sanction of plane noise. One set noise-level limits on individual flights. The other outlined a novel concept of "cumulative" community noise.

Under this concept, airport noise would be monitored around the clock, and periodic readings averaged. The 24-hour averages could not exceed certain noise levels. Airports were required to adopt measures ranging from traffic restrictions to sound-buffering to stay within this "cumulative" noise levels.

In effect, the plan would spread out noise around the clock. Individual flights could exceed—as many do—100 decibels, at close range. But throughout 24 hours—with night noise weighted in calculations to count more than daytime noise—residents would be subjected to far less aggregate din.

The California regulations call for a progressive dampen*ing of the "cumulative"* sound, from a level of 80 decibels in 1975 down to 65 decibels in 1986.

Eighty decibels is well up on the annoyance scale, but below the level where protracted exposure is known to permanently impair hearing.

On the complicated decibel scale, each increase of 10 represents as much as a 10-fold increase in sound volume. Accordingly, the eventual reduction to 65 decibels—the level of traffic noise on a city street—would represent a great diminution of din.

As it has whenever localities have tried to regulate air traffic, the airlines' trade group, the Air Transport Association, went to Federal court here charging that the state restrictions were unconstitutional because of Federal "preemption" of aviation regulation.

Fourteen other states, and to some observers' surprise, the Federal Aviation Agency itself entered the case (Air Transport Association v. Crotti) on California's side as friends of the court.

A Partial Victory

Also, to some surprise, in a preliminary round of the suit California scored a tentative partial victory.

Ruling on an A.T.A. motion for summary judgment, before any trial of the issues, a special three-judge panel held last year that California's restrictions on individual flights did conflict with Federal "preemp*tion,*" but that the California plan for around-the-clock reduction of noise was not per se unconstitutional because of any such conflict.

This means that in the trial of the case, which is expected to come within the next few months, the airlines will have to come up with some better argument against state intervention than the purely jurisdictional issue they have relied on in the past.

And it means that if the airlines' challenge to California should eventually get to the United States Supreme court and be rejected, all states will be able to institute similar noise-reduction programs.

Whether "cumulative commu*nity noise" regulation could be* invoked by states against flights by the supersonic transports would depend not directly on their very high noise level, but on how this averaged out with the additional plane noise at given airports.

The way the noise reduction plan works is illustrated in the program of the Los Angees International Airport, one of the nation's busiest, which technically went into effect Monday.

Under it, each of 16 air carriers was told in effect that it would have to design its own abatement program to produce a 20 percent reduction annually in excessive plane noise.

The airlines have such optionse as cutting operations, rescheduling flights, changing landing and takeoff patterns, using quieter plane types,, and retrofitting noisy planes with sound-suppressing equipment.

Ten other California airports with certified noise problems are tailoring abatement programs along similar lines.

The Air Transport Association filed a new suit in January challenging the Los Angeles program, and has gotten a temporary injunction against the airlines' having to file corrective plans immediately.

Assistant Attorney General Nicholas Yost, head of the state's environmental law unit and a nationally noted specialist in airplane noise, said the issues in the suit were essen*tially the same as those already* being argued in the San Francisco case, where the focus is on an allegation of illegal interference with interstate commerce.

The United States Supreme Court has never ruled definitively on the issue of Federal "preemption" of air traffic regulation as opposed to local measures.

Carey Signs Bill To Bar Concorde At Kennedy Airport

Governor Carey, who has vowed to try to keep the Concorde supersonic airliner from operating to Kennedy International Airport, signed a bill yesterday representing one move in that direction.

The bill, which would forbid landings by planes whose noise levels exceed certain standards cannot take effect unless duplicated by New Jersey. This is because Kennedy is operated by a bistate agency, the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey. However, Mr. Carey has said he would try to block the plane on his own, if necessary, by vetoing any decision of the Port Authority to let in the Concorde.

Ultimately, any ban engineered by Mr. Carey appears certain to be challenged legally in one or two ways. The British and French, who built and operate the 1,350-mile-an-hour Concorde, have threatened to take the issue to court as a discriminatory violation of international treaties. There is also a possibility the Federal government would seek to overturn a ban by claiming top authority in setting standards for interstate and international operations by all airliners.

Such legal challenges would probably take months to run their courses, so it is generally taken for granted that the Concorde will not come to Kennedy before the end of the year, if ever.

The main criticism of the New York law is that it would illegally discriminate against the Concorde. This is because of a clause granting a five-year exemption from the bill's noise standards to noncomplying subsonic planes already in use.

Wine Sale AT Post LIQUORS

1971 BORDEAUX ON SALE

For a period of time this noble vintage has been overlooked because of the universal praise received by the 1970's. Although the quantity in no way approaches the 70 vintage - the quality does and the smaller yield has resulted in a greater concentration of flavor. Peter Sichel, noted wine authority and author compared the two vintages in a recent vintage report - he states, "we disagree with those who say the 71's should be drunk before 1970's. They appear lighter because they have less fruit but they have a length which signifies long life and exceptional elegance. A very good year indeed, and the top Chateaux will certainly still be full of life in the late 1980's." He further states, "those who enjoy splitting hairs will be able to compare the two vintages for years to come, like 1928 and 1929's." High praise indeed- here is a chance to round out your cellars with an excellent vintage - extremely more successful than the following 72's, 73's and 74's at prices especially reduced for this sale.

BEAUJOLAIS COTES DU RHONE ON SALE

The 1975 vintage was very disappointing in both the Beaujolais and Cotes Du Rhone Regions. At a recent dinner we shared with noted wine authority, Alexis Lichine, discussed the problems of this vintage. His conclusions were that the small amount of good wine produced will be very expensive and the inexpensive Beaujolais and Rhones will be of questionable quality. These facts are bound to inflate the prices of the better preceding vintages and we believe now is the time to invest in these good popular wines of the Beaujolais and Rhone areas before these price levels reach New York.

Vaccination Refusal A National Problem

By GRACE LICHTENSTEIN
Special to The New York Times

CORTEZ, Colo., March 1—"Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him . . . and the prayer of the faith shall save the sick . . . ." Peter, 1:14.

There have been sick, fatally sick children, among the several hundred members of the Church of the First Born in this small agricultural town in southwest Colorado. But, in accordance with their interpretation of the Scriptures, the congregation prays instead of seeking medical help.

A few weeks ago, a 3-year-old boy died of diphtheria, an acutely contagious bacterial disease of the respiratory tract. Sixteen months ago his 4-year-old cousin died of the same disease. Yet the brethren of the church, which claims loose affiliation with thousands of other members in assemblies across the country, have refused immunization, as they always have. They agreed to voluntary quarantine instead.

The two diptheria outbreaks here apparently are the worst examples since October 1972 when 11 pupils at a Christian Science preparatory school in Greenwich, Conn., contracted polio. Four were left paralyzed. Like them, the 200 or so First Born children are not immunized against polio or any other disease.

"There aren't going to be too many people here today," said the Rev. John Carver, pastor of the Church of the First Born, as about 50 persons filed into the bare cinder-block church on an unpaved road south of town. "We've got a lot of measles going around."

Many of the First Born children have not been to public school recently, either because of measles or because of the quarantine their parents accepted after they refused to be immunized last month by state health officials against diphtheria and other "baby diseases."

According to Dr. Stanley W. Ferguson, who investigated the Cortez outbreaks, the parents did allow physicians to take throat cultures from about 130 children to see whether they were carriers. Two children from one family who showed positive diphtheria cultures were treated with antibiotics.

Mr. Carver, 76 years old, who used to be a Kansas railroad station clerk explained that the church permitted the use of antibiotics because "we're not out to scatter any diseases."

"We didn't want to be carriers knowingly. And the medicine was not to heal, it was preventive."

The two dead youngsters were Mr. Carver's own grandchildren. Yet he, the mothers of the dead children and others whose children have died because of nonimmunization were in church yesterday, their beiefs intact.

One was Hilda Fish, 30, who has nine children. "The faith gives me the choice whether to turn to man or turn to God," she said, cradling one child in her arms. "If my children get sick, it's for a purpose."

One of her babies died of stomach flu, another of pneumonia. "It doesn't shake my faith. God's still God," she said, adding, "Maybe it was a blessing. Life isn't everything and everyone has to die."

Mrs. Fish's husband, who was not at the service, does not hold her beliefs. When their six-week-old son was stricken with appendicitis in California, the father had him brought to a hospital. The boy recovered.

"Floyd had died and was risen before they took him to the hospital," Mrs. Fish said firmly. "I felt he would have gotten well anyway."

To an outsider, the Sunday morning worship at the Church of the First Born, which began and ended with hymns, seemed to dwell on death.

"I'm not against what they do," Mr. Carver said of the state health officials during his 90-minute sermon. "But there's a judgment. You know we're all going to die. You kill every fish you eat. All the animals, all the vegetables—they're dead when you chew them. We live by death." Healing, he said over and over, is provided by God, not by doctors or drugs.

Dr. Ferguson fears that the chance of an outbreak of polio or tetanus among the First Born congregation is a "real possibility."

Some medical authorities have worried about serious dangers from reduced immunization of children in various areas of the country, particularly in rural and inner city areas. They point to such factors as ignorance, poverty, lack of adequate health care and complacency about health care as reasons for this trend.

In Colorado, 21.5 percent of the children have not been fully immunized. In rural and inner city areas of the state, Dr. Ferguson said, the situation is "deplorable." Moreover, he added, the situation "exists at a time when Federal support for immmization programs is dwindling to virtually nothing."

Members of the Church of the First Born are not worried. As they stood to testify, one by one, toward the end of the Sunday service, one elderly woman said, "If we just wait, God will work it out."

Cancer Death Rate Rose in 1974 and 1975

The increase from 1973 to 1974 was 1.9 percent. The rate at which people die of cancer has steadily increased for many years. Not since 1950 has the increase in the cancer death rate gone as high as 2 percent, the center's figures show. It has not risen above 2 percent since 1945, when the increase over the previous year was 4 percent.

Specialists believe the World War II figures may be somewhat distorted, however. Millions of young men and women fere overseas and were not used in calculating the resident death rate. Since more older people than young ones die of cancer, the wartime situation would favor an apparently high death rate.

The 2 percent figure was exceeded several times in the late 1930's, and in 1948. The latter case, however, results partly from a change in the statisticians' classification of cancer and did not represent a true picture of a changing death rate.

Srecialists at the center do not take an alarmist view of the new high rates of increase. Whatever factors influenced the 1975 death rate were likely to be multiple and diverse and were probably exerting their influence 20 years or more ago. Many cancers are believed to take decades to develop.

The cancer death rate represents the number of pedsons per 100,000 of the population who die of cancer during a given year. For 1974, the latest year for which complete figures are available, the rate was 170.5 per 100,000.

Robert J. Armstrong, chief of the national center's mortality statistics branch, said today that cancer was the only leading cause of death for which the death rate has been steadily increasing in recent decades.

Over the last two decades, the rate of increase has been about 1 percent a year on the average, according to the national center's figures. A substantial part of this is attributed to the increasing average age of the population. The rest of the annual rise is of unknown cause. It is the "unknown" part that is of great public health interest.

In recent years there has been a cyclical pattern, Mr. Armstrong said, in which a relatively sharp rise would be seen one year, followed by a lull involving hardly any rise the next.

The reason for these cycles is unknown, but the center's experts believe the pattern of rise and fall in influenza incidence is probably a contributing factor. Their theory is that flu is likely to weaken persons already near death from a chronic disease such as cancer and thus hasten deaths that might otherwise have occurred weeks or months later.

Provisional monthly figures from the National Center for Health Statistics began to show unusually high rates early in 1975. When figures for the first seven months of the year became available, the rise in rate appeared to be 5.2 percent—a dramatic increase. Earlier figures covering shorter portions of the year had shown even higher apparent rates.

The 52 percent figure was published without comment in November in a routine monthly vital-statistics report of the center. The startling size of the increase immediately brought much publicity to the figure and speculation as to the causes of the rise. In January, a biostatistician of the National Cancer Institute gave a talk to the institute staff on the subject, emphasizing that the seemingly dramatic trend for part of the year was returning toward normal as more and more months were added.

He described the seemingly threatened one-year rise of 5.2 percent as "the increase that wasn't there."

While that great an increase has not occurred over the full year, the final figure is nevertheless expected to be far above the trend experienced during recent decades.

"We will certainly be watching the monthly figures in 1976 with great interest," one expert said.

Pilot Killed in Plane Crash

READING, Pa., March 5 (AP)—A twin-engine plane crashed in the woods near the Berks County village of Knauers yesterday, killing the pilot, Silvio Adamo, 52 years old, of Chambersburg.

Bank Bandits, Doused With Dye, Drop Money

LIVONIA, Michigan, March 5 (UPI)—When six machine gun-carrying bandits took a money bag from a Livonia branch of the Michigan National Bank yesterday, an electronic triggering device doused them in red dye, Livonia Police Chief Robert Turner said. They dropped the money bag and fled.

Chief Turner said two men arrested in Detroit several hours later were possible suspects. At least one man reportedly was carrying a machine gun, he said.

Miss Hamill Leading in Title Skate

GOTEBORG, Sweden, March 5 (UPI)—The only hope for a United States gold medal in the world figure skating championships lies with Dorothy Hamill, 19 years old, the Olympic's champion, who moved up to first place today after winning the women's short program with an almost perfect performance that earned her 87.36 points and 14.5 ordinals.

Despite two minor errors when doing a double axel and a flying sit spin, Miss Hamill's performance was good enough to move her to the top. She can wrap up the title in tomorrow's free-style skating.

After the short program, Dianne Deleeuw, an American girl competing for the Netherlands because of her parents' heritage, moved up to second place with 86.44 points and 21.5 ordinals, followed by Isabel de Navarre of West Germany and Christine Errath, 19, of East Germany.

Miss Hamill received mostly 5.8's for technical merit and near-perfect marks of 5.9's from four of the nine judges for the artistic impression.

Lyudmila Pakhomova and Aleksandr Gorshkov of the Soviet Union regained their world ice dancing title with a performance that earned them a near-perfect set of marks from the judges.

The finish was exactly the same as at the Innsbruck Olympics last month, with the defending champions, Irinia Moiseyeva and Andrei Minenkov of the Soviet Union, fighting a close battle with Colleen O'Connor and Jim Millns of Colorado Springs in winning the silver medal ahead of the American pair.

The Pakhomova-Gorshkov team, skating before a near-sellout crowd of 12,000 produced a fault-free four minutes of dancing and gained seven perfect 6.0 marks from the nine judges for artistic merit—the Polish and American judges awarded them 5.9's. Three judges also awarded them perfect marks for technical performance.

Smalley Resigns As Coach of Navy

ANNAPOLIS, Md., March 5 (AP)—Dave Smalley, head basketball coach at the United States Naval Academy for the last 10 years, resigned today effective May 31 to devote full time to other academy duties.

Smalley, only the third basketball coach at Navy in the last half century, coached the Middies to a 10-14 won-lost record this season and had a career record of 94-130 during his years at the school, which has a height limitation of 6 feet 7 inches for its students.

Ed Kea (19) of the Flames clearing the Rangers' Pat Hickey away from the net after Hickey made a scoring attempt in the first period at Atlanta last night.

Flames Strike Quickly And Rout Rangers, 8-3

By PARTON KEESE
Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, March 5—The slim playoff hopes of the New York Rangers went up in smoke tonight when "the team they had to beat" beat them instead, 8-3.

In the game they had pointed for and had called the most crucial of the season, the Rangers fell flat on the Omni ise and were routed and embarrassed by the Atlanta Flames, a club that had won only four times in the 22 previous games.

Atlanta's convincing victory put it 11 points ahead of New York with only 14 games left for the Rangers. The Flames have 13 remaining.

"I left N.Y. because of the Rangers" read a sign at the end of the rink, and by the end of the game, it was easy to see why. The Flames sewed up the contest with four goals in the opening period. The Rangers, meanwhile, averaged only seven shots a period. Two of New York's scores came in the final 2½ minutes, long after the game was out of its reach.

Coach John Ferguson's charges practically tripped over the blue lines in their futility. Leaving their fighting spirit on the plane, the Rangers generated no attack whatsoever in the first period, sending only five shots at Phil Myre, the Flames' goalie. Four of the five were the feeble kind.

On half of their attempted rushes, the Rangers were offside. The other attempts were easily intercepted by the Flames' back-checkers. Besides that, New York had a miserable time clearing the pucks rom its own end, and that is what eventually hurt the Rangers the most.

Tom Lysiak and Barry Gibbs combined for the first Atlanta score slightly past the five-minute mark. The puck shot by Gibbs, a defenseman, beat John Davidson from the right faceoff circle.

Big John proved the right side was not his only weakness this evening. Bill Clement took a shot from the extreme left side of the faceoff circle and also got it past the Ranger netminder. Then in the last 50 seconds, two more Flame shots whizzed by Davidson, one a 50-ooter by Ed Kea at 19:11 and the other a 55-footer by Randy Manery at 19:25.

That was all for Davidson as Ferguson informed Dunc Wilson he would be taking over in the net. This marked the third straight game against Atlanta that Davidson had started and not finished.

Gilles Marotte made his appearance as a penalty killer for New York after missing 12 games with a bruised ankle. And Greg Holst, a

Baseball Players Reported To Have Toughened Stand

By MURRAY CHASS

Rule of thumb for figuring out the baseball dilemma: the shorter the negotiating session the farther away spring training is.

Negotiators for the players and owners met three times this week, and each session ended more quickly than the one before. After negotiating for nearly five hours last Monday and two and a half hours Wednesday, they talked for only one hour yesterday, then didn't even bother scheduling another meeting.

Generally not much happens in an hour. However, something of significance—albeit negative significance—apparently occurred at yesterday's brief gathering.

Marvin Miller, the players' chief negotiator, had threatened earlier in the week to withdraw the Players Association's proposals for a new reserve system, and he apparently did so yesterday.

No one from either side would confirm Miller's action, but no one denied it either. Instead, both sides scheduled news conferences for today: Miller in his office on Park Avenue at 11 A.M. and the owners' negotiating team in John Gaherin's office on 42d Street at 12:30 P.M.

"I'm afraid we're going to have a few trying days," said Lee MacPhail, president of the American League and one of the owners' negotiators.

It was expected that Miller would disclose at his news conference that he had removed the players' proposals from the table and was withdrawing to a previous harder position — that the players would stand on the court interpretation of the renewal clause without any negotiated modifications.

Under that interpretation, a player can become a free agent by playing one year without having signed a contract. The owners have insisted that such a system would be unworkable and would destroy tha game. They have not responded favorably to the players' ideas for modification.

The association has proposed that a player with four years' major league service or seven years' professional service could demand to be traded and, if he weren't, he

Rutgers, St. John's To Clash

By GORDON S. WHITE JR.

Rutgers and St. John's basketball players and their fans, who have long anticipated a shootout at Madison Square Garden, will have it today this afternoon at 3 o'clock in the final of the Eastern College Athletic Conference metropolitan regional playoff.

First prize will be a trip to Providence, R.I., to play Princeton, the Ivy League champion, in the opening round of the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament next Saturday. The booby prize is a game with Indiana, undefeated and the top-ranked team in the nation, in the N.C.A.A. first round at South Bend, Ind. also next Saturday.

Only the winning team from each of the other E.C.A.C regionals will move on to the N.C.A.A. championship. Syracuse will play Niagara today at Syracuse for the New York Upstate title and the right to go to Denton, Tex., and play the Southwest Conference champion. Providence and Connecticut meet for the E.C.A.C. New England title at Springfield, Mass., and the privilege of playing the East Coast Conference champion at Providence. The Southern E.C.A.C. champion will play Arizona in another N.C.A.A. opener at Tempe, Ariz.

The National Invitation Tournament selection committee, which will consider teams left after the N.C.A.A. tournament field is settled, will announce its first bids tomorrow.

Kermit Zarley protecting himself from the rain as he lines up a putt on the 14th hole in the Citrus Open at Orlando, Fla. He shot a 66 during the second round yesterday.

Zarley Leads Golf by 2 Shots

By JOHN S. RADOSTA
Special to The New York Times

ORLANDO, Fla., March 5—Kermit Zarley, who returned to golf competition in January after a chancy operation to fuse discs in the vertebrae of his neck, zoomed past the opposition today and took the lead in the second round of the Florida Citrus open.

Zarley, a 34-year-old Texan, shot 66 this afternoon, six strokes under par for the pine-framed Rio Pinar Country Club. With yesterday's 67, Zarley had a 36-hole aggregate of 133, or 11 under par.

A shower forced the suspension of play for 20 minutes, and one effect was to break Zarley's momentum. He had completed 14 holes when the rain started. After resuming play he pushed two drives into the pines, one of them costing him a bogey.

Zarley started today in a four-way tie for fourth place, two shots behind Mark Hayes and Mike Hill. With today's round he established a two-stroke lead over Hayes and Gay Brewer, whose 135 put them at nine under par. Hayes shot 70 today and Brewer, a 20-year veteran of the tour, followed yesterday's 66 with a 69.

John Mahaffey, runner-up in last year's United States Open, scored a fine 67, partly on the strength of a driver he seems to have found at the end of a rainbow. Mahaffey has been experimenting with drivers, without success, since last fall, but now he is using one made for him by Tom Weiskopf.

You could make up some dandy foursomes from the players who were eliminated in tonight's 36-hole cut at 144. Among them were Lee Trevino, the defender; Arnold Palmer, the 1971 winner; Tom Weiskopf and Gene Littler.

Zarley is in fine fettle because of what he calls his "Resurrection Neck" and because he likes this tournament.

"I like this course and this town," Zarley said, "and that has a lot to do with how well I play."

Zarley started today's round from the 10th tee, and he did not miss a green until No. 7, the 16th of his round, where he also missed the fairway for the first time.

After routine pars on 10, 11 and 12, Zarley ran up five birdies in the next six holes. He rolled in a 10-foot putt for a birdie on the 13th and a 25-footer, on the 14th. A poor wedge shot on the par-5 15th made a birdie impossible, but then he ran in a string of three in a row with putts of 10, 8 and 15 feet.

On the front nine Zarley also birdied the third with an eight-foot putt, but then he hit his first bad drive on the seventh, a par of 573 yards. Zarley pushed his drive into the trees, and he was so hampered by one tree that he was convinced he would break his 7-iron in his attempt to get out to the fairway. He did reach the fairway, but his third shot sailed beyond the green. He finally reached the putting surface in four, but he missed the eight-foot putt for par.

On No. 9, the 18th of his round, he was tired from the long day and the pressure, and again, he pushed his tee shot into the pines. From there he got a 7-iron to the front edge and then chipped down for a "gimme" putt and a saved par.

Hayes, yesterday's co-leader, reported the tricky wind conditions forced him to

The 'City Kid' from the Virgin Islands

In the gaudiest college basketball game between two local teams since shaving without a razor was declared improper by the District Attorney's office 25 years ago, unbeaten Rutgers opposes unawed St. John's at Madison Square Garden today for the Eastern College Athletic Conference Metropolitan championship, a neighborhood prelude to the N.C.A.A. tournament. All the city kids will be showing how they play what is known as the city game. But the outcome might be decided by a 6-foot-4-inch St. John's guard, Glen Williams Jr., from a city known more for bay rum than basketball.

Sports of The Times

Glen Williams grew up in Charlotte Amalie on St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands, but he leads the Redmen in scoring with an average of 14.5 points. With 25 points against St. Peter's in the Redmen's 75-67 victory in Thursday night's semifinal, the bamboo-slim junior now has 1,024 points. Six more and he will surpass Harry Boykoff, a towering center three decades ago, among the top St. John's career scorers. But the Harry that Glen Williams is usually compared to is Belafonte; he talks with the lilt of the Caribbean, prefers yellowtail fish to steak and listens to Reggae music, a mixture of rock and calypso. His teammates call him "Reggae" but he grew up playing basketball to the sound of the same beat that the city kids do. The sound of a basketball bouncing on a playground court.

"The court was so close I could hear the ball bouncing when I woke up in the morning," he says. "I think it woke me up."

'All Day, All Night'

He was living in the Paul M. Payson housing project. He had mostly played baseball until he broke his right arm in a slide.

"I was 11 then, and I began playing basketball instead. On a dirt court first, then on the asphalt court at our project. There were only two outdoor courts on the island, one asphalt and one concrete. But they were lighted. I would get up at 6 in the morning and play until noon, then go to the beach and swim until 4, and by then, with the sun going down, everybody was at the courts and I would play until 10, 11 at night. Sometimes we would go to a party, then come back at 4 in the morning and turn on the lights and play some more. You play all day, all night."

At the age of 15, he was averaging 39 points a game in the 13-to-16 age group league.

"They put me on the national team that played in the Central American tournament in Panama," he said. "The other players were older, some of them men. I didn't start the first two games, but I started after that, and we finished behind Puerto Rico, Mexico, Panama and Cuba."

In high school his coach was Arthur Jamison, a North Carolinian who arranged for him to transfer to Laurinburg (N.C.) Prep.

"I didn't like to go to school, but Mr. Jamison would come to my home and get me in the morning and walk me to school, like a little kid. We played a few games indoors, but mostly we played outdoors. Everybody always asks about the wind. There is no wind in St. Thomas, only gentle breezes. The games were packed with people all around the court, chattering all the time. They stand on the baseline. You cannot drive the baseline. You cannot go out of bounds. But when I went to Laurinburg, at first I didn't like it. I went with a friend of mine, Robert Gums, and he couldn't take it. He didn't like the food, he didn't like the classes. It was a big transition. He went home. I called my father and asked to come home, too, and he told me, 'All right, come home Christmas' and this was in September, but when the basketball season started, I liked it. I averaged 30 points my first year there, 28 my second. I could have gone to any of the Atlantic Coast Conference schools.

Playing for Laurinburg Prep in a preliminary to a New York Nets' game at Nassau Coliseum, he was noticed by Lou Carnesecca, then in his final season as the Nets' coach.

"At the time I wasn't thinking about returning to St. John's," says Carnesecca, "but as it turned out, I was there when Glen arrived as a freshman. He was a find. And he must have had good coaching because he was a very sound player even as a freshman."

The Adjustments

Glen Williams had to adjust to what he calls "pattern basketball." He says, "I had to play defense to make the team." He also had to adjust to the environment of living in the big city."

"My father is still in St. Thomas as a customs agent," he says. "But my mother lives in the Bronx, with most of my 10 brothers and sisters. I live in Brooklyn with my cousins because there are too many people in the house with my mother—small ones, big ones."

He misses the warm weather on St. Thomas and the Caribbean fish delicacies.

"Yellowtail and a fish called Old Wife, a flat fish this big," he says, holding his hands nearly two feet apart. "Delicious. I wish I had some now. I miss the Reggae music too. Bob Morley and the Whalers, he is the biggest Reggae man in the world."

Glen Williams is an athletic administration major who eventually hopes to return to St. Thomas as a coach.

"I'm very big there," he says. "I could run for mayor. There has been only one major league player, Alvin McBean, and the boxer, Emile Griffith, from St. Thomas, and now me. I would like to get a job in sports here. But if not, I will go home and coach. Teach the kids what I learn here.

But first, this is the game, against Rutgers, this is the game. I wanted them to go through the season undefeated. I want to be the team to beat 'em."

Triumph Follows Tragedy As Meeting Ends at Hialeah

Special to The New York Times

MIAMI, March 5—Closing day at Hialeah supplied tragedy and triumph, in that order, for Steve DiMauro today. At 10 o'clock this morning the trainer watched Sharhazad, a highly promising Damascus filly, work five-eighths of a mile. Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Hackman, who own the 3-year-old, were with DiMauro.

At the Race Tracks

As Sharharzad reached the finish line, the exercise boy hit her and she ducked in, snapping her left front ankle. The injury was so severe that there was no choice to be made. She was destroyed on the track.

"I can't say what she was worth, but she was an awfully nice filly," DiMauro said. "It was a real blow." Sharharzad had finished second in her only two starts.

But by the end of the day DiMauro was smiling broadly. He had finished as the leading trainer at the meeting, with 14 winners, and the 14th victory was a stunning upset by Lord Henham in the second division of the Hialeah Turf Cup.

In a stirring battle from the top of the stretch to the wire, Lord Henham finished a nose in front of One on the Aisle, the 5-2 second choice, with Toonerville, the 2-1 favorite, a neck farther back. Lord Henham, an Irish-bred horse, had failed to win in seven previous starts in this country. He is owned by R. E. Sangster, an English bookmaker.

The winner, ridden by Roger Velez, ran the mile and a half on grass in 2:28 1/5 and paid $44 for $2 to win. The winner's purse was $61,652. Lord Henham carried only 108 pounds, while One on the Aisle had 119 and Toonerville 124.

The first division was drab in comparison. Legion took the lead at the break and led every step of the way. He finished two lengths in front of Zografos, who was three-quarters of a length in front of Invinsible You.

Ridden by Earlie Fires, Legion was timed in 2:29 1/5 and paid $19.20. He earned $62,302, only $917 less than he earned last year in 30 starts. He is owned by Ralph Chapman of Detroit. His trainer G. F. Jabalee claimed Legion for $6,500 two years ago.

A crowd of 16,696 wagered $1,881,748—a mediocre closing day for what has been another mediocre meeting from a business standpoint. Mutuel play was down for the seventh successive year as Hialeah, in 44 days, failed to match Gulfstream's 1974 meeting of 40 days with the middle dates. Hialeah had the choice dates this year for the second successive winter.

The Hialeah handle was down 4.4 percent from its 1975 meeting, and down 9.7 percent from Gulfstream's 1974 meeting. The daily average was $1,595,369, against $1,669,199 last year and $1,768,457 for Gulfstream in 1974. Attendance was down 6.8 percent from last year's meeting.

The outlook is grim. Today's card may well have been the last in the track's 51-year-history. The stockholders have voted to sell out three times in the last 16 months, most recently to John Brunetti, a New Jersey land developer.

Brunetti intends to keep the track going, but is having considerable problems coming to terms with the two banks that hold the mortgage on the heavily indebted track. He was frustrated by the same problem when he tried to buy Hialeah last fall.

If he fails again, the only viable alternative for Hialeah stockholders is to agree to sell to James Donn Jr., Gulfstream president, who would switch the dates to his track.

Gulfstream opens a 57-day meeting tomorrow, with Foolish Pleasure carrying high weight of 129 pounds against nine rivals in the $65,000 Donn Handicap at seven furlongs.

At Aqueduct...

Lord Henribee is listed as the early 3-5 favorite for the 75th running of the Swift Stakes, the opening event in New York of the march to the Triple Crown for 3-year-olds. Lord Henribee, owned by Milton Ritzenberg, will make his season debut with Eddie Maple riding. He will carry top weight of 122 pounds against Whatsyourpleasure, Eustace, Story Rights, National Flag and Cojak. If all start, the gross purse will be $55,500, with $33,300 to the winner.

Lord Henribee won four of his five starts last year, including a pair of New York stakes races, the Nashua and Rockaway, and finished second in his other start. Elmendorf Farm's National Flag, with Jorge Velasquez up, is the early second choice at 4-1. He won a stakes race last year and finished in the money in 7 of 10 starts, then won his only start of this year.

Rose Signs Contract While Morgan Balks

Although he did not receive the $200,000 salary that he had been aiming for, Pete Rose signed a contract with the Cincinnati Reds yesterday and said he was pleased with it.

"I didn't get $200,000, but I did get a nice raise," Rose said.

"It's fair and I'm happy with it. I've only had one other pay raise bigger than this one and that was right after I was the National League's most valuable player in 1973." He was also most valuable player in the 1975 world series.

Rose said he was not unhappy to be paid less than Johnny Bench, who recently signed for a reported $200,000. "It seems that the guy who hits all the home runs makes all the money, but I don't worry about that," he said. "Anyway, I'm the highest paid third baseman in baseball."

Rose may be happy with less than $200,000, but his teammate, Joe Morgan, says he will not settle for less than that figure.

Morgan, when told of Rose's signing, said: "If Pete agrees on a figure he really doesn't think is fair, that's his business, I won't. Figures show that the last three years I've been the No. 1 offensive player in baseball. The Reds have those figures, too. I feel I have yet to reach my peak." The second baseman was the National League's most valuable player in 1975.

Three professional athletes will miss the rest of this season and a fourth will be sidelined for two weeks because of knee injuries. In each case, the problem knee is the left one.

The Boston Bruins' Brad Park, an all-star defenseman who was traded earlier in the National Hockey League season from the New York Rangers, underwent a 1½-hour operation in Boston to repair torn cartilage. Park, who had 16 goals and 37 assists in 43 games with Boston, is expected to miss the rest of the season.

The Rangers announced that Ron Harris, who had knee surgery in October, would sit out the remainder of the season. He had played in only three games, the last one Jan. 10. The 33-year-old defenseman had one assist to his credit.

After an examination of John Havlicek yesterday in Boston, the Celtics decided to keep their star forward out of action for two weeks because of an injury suffered Wednesday night in Philadelphia. He suffered a severe contusion of the knee and possibly a torn lateral cartilage. Havlicek will miss six games of the National Basketball Association schedule before his injury is reappraised.

Willie Wise of the Virginia Squires is through for the American Basketball Association season. The 28-year-old forward is suffering from a bone spur in his knee and will have surgery in Los Angeles within two weeks.

One day after winning the men's world figure skating championship in Goteborg, Sweden, John Curry of Britain announced his retirement from amateur competition. Last month he won a gold medal in the event in the Winter Olympics.

"Since the Olympics I have had a lot of offers," he said. "Right now I am going to sort them out. I have a lot, including something I did not dream about, such as writing and singing. Everyone who is from a major ice show is here and I'm not going to rule anything out."

"There are many excellent pole vaulters in the United States, but they are not consistent," said Wladyslaw Kozakiewicz of Poland after returning from a recent tour of this country. "Polish jumpers have a better technique. American vaulters can be defeated. We can now start thinking about our chances in the Montreal Olympics."

The California Athletic Commision has barred Ray Lampkin, a lightweight from Portland, Ore., from fighting Armando Mendieta on March 16 in San Francisco. Robert Turley, the executive director, said he prohibited the bout because he was concerned about Lampkin's health and safety.

The fighter was hospitalized for five days in Panama after being knocked out by Roberto Duran a year ago. Last month he lost a unanimous decision to Vilamar Fernandez in New York. Turley spoke on the phone to James Farley Jr., the chairman of the New York Athletic Commission. "Farley told me he was scared to death that this kid was going to get killed or seriously injured," he said.

After its basketball team had won only five of 26 games this season, Davidson College has dismissed the coach. Robert [Bo] Brickels, whose teams had a 12-40 won-lost record in two seasons, was dismissed after two days of meetings by college officials.

Last week the board of trustees approved a resolution calling for a return to the "national level basketball program" the school enjoyed in the 1960's under Lefty Driesell, now the coach at Maryland.

Lead Taken By Wyoming In Title Ski

By MICHAEL STRAUSS
Special to The New York Times

BETHEL, Me., March 5—Paced by Mike Meleski, a 145-pound freshman who learned to ski and race in the flat country of central Minnesota, the University of Wyoming today replaced Dartmouth as the leader in the National Collegiate Athletic Association championships.

The Cowboys, the winner of the N.C.A.A. ski title only once—in 1968—turned in a powerful performance in placing three scorers among the top seven in a two-run slalom held at the fog-shrouded Sunday River ski area. Larry Kennison was third and Bill Shaw seventh for the Cowboys.

Wyoming's rise to the top of the four-day tournament, which has attracted 11 teams from across the United States, was the third time in three days that a different college had occupied first place. At the end of the first of the four events—the giant slalom—last Wednesday, Colorado was on top. The Buffaloes have captured the title four consecutive years.

"This meet still can be won by any of four teams," said Jim Page, the Dartmouth coach. "It has been filled with surprises so far."

The overall victor will be determined tomorrow afternoon when the scene shifts 25 miles to the east for a jumping tournament at Rumford. As of tonight, however, Wyoming with 90 points led Colorado by 2. Dartmouth was third with 86, followed by Vermont's 78.

Chip LaCasse, the Vermont coach whose team was considered a top contender despite key injuries during the season, was the victim of more bad luck when Kirk Dice, a junior from Cheshire, Conn., led the Catamounts with a fifth-place finish.

Dice's good performance, however, did not count in the scoring. Only four racers from each college are permitted to race for team points. Dice, who was today's leader after the first run, was not one of the four selected by the Catamounts. Had he been, Vermont's three-event point total would have been considerably higher.

"It was just a bad break," explained Dennis Lambert, the athletic director at Vermont who formerly was the ski coach. "Chip bypassed Dice because the college has to name its four eligible scorers in advance for the two Alpine and two Nordic event disciplines. Chip felt he had entered another athlete who, over all, was stronger than Dice in the Alpine competition."

In leading Wyoming to its decisive victory in today's slalom, Meleski, third at the conclusion of the first round, turned in a fine rhythmic performance to register the second run's second fastest time of 47.15 seconds.

Jones, Phil M[ahre] 1,2 in Giant Sl[alom]

COPPER MOUNTAIN, Colo., March 5 (AP)—Greg Jones and Phil Mahre of the United States, in an unusual showing against the world's greatest skiers, swept the first two places today in the men's giant slalom, and Rosi Mittermaier of West Germany moved closer to her first world championship in the first World Cup stop since the 12th Winter Olympic Games at Innsbruck, Austria.

Jones, of Tahoe City, Calif., turned in the best time on both runs. His time after the first run was 1 minute 36.34 seconds, and he had a 1:44.17 over the same course on the second run for a combined time of 3:20.51 as the 11,000-foot altitude took its toll on the skiers.

Mahre, fourth after the first run in 1:36.65, actually took the lead briefly from his compatriot. He was the second man to make the second run and his time of 1:44.18 stood until Jones eclipsed it by one one-hundredth of a second. Mahre's combined time was 3:20.83.

Miss Mittermaier, the 25-year-old dean of women's skiing, scored an easy victory in the giant slalom, beating Cindy Nelson of Lutsen, Minn., by more than one second. Miss Mittermaier's time was 1:28.45 and Miss Nelson's was 1:29.77.

Miss Mittermaier, a double gold medal winner at the Innsbruck Olympics last month, assumed an imposing lead over Lise-Marie Morerod of Switzerland in the overall Cup standing with her victory today.

Jones and Mahre, a twin brother of Steve Mahre, a World Cup skier, embraced at the bottom of the slope waiting to see whether Ernst Good of Switzerland or Hans Enn of Austria could beat their times.

Special to The New York Times

PRINCETON, N.J., March 5—Villanova and Maryland are co-favorites for the team title as the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America holds its 55th indoor track and field championships at Princeton's Jadwin Gymnasium tomorrow and Sunday.

Villanova's blue-chip middle and long distance runners, led by Eamonn Coghlan in the two-mile run and Mark Belger in the half-mile, must win most of their races to get the maximum yield from the meet's 6-4-3-2-1 scoring system. Traditionally, the Wildcats do win these races; the team title has been carried back to Philadelphia's Main Line in 13 of the last 19 years.

Maryland, also following a familiar pattern, is strongest this year in the jumps, sprints and hurdles. But the Terrapins face strong opposition in the 60-yard dash and the hurdles from Seton Hall, the defending team champion.

The team title will probably be decided by the meet's final event, the one-mile relay, as it has been for the last three years. The three relays are vital to the chances of the two favorites. Most of Villanova's stars will be running in individual events and then doubling back in a relay race, a formula that has worked well for Jumbo Elliott, the Wildcat coach, in the past. By contrast, Frank Costello, the Maryland coach, is holding most of his key middle distance men out of the individual races so they'll be fresh for the relays.

Four 1975 champions are entered, but only Maryland's Mike Remus, in the pole vault, and John Davenport, in the long jump, will defend their titles. Last year's 1,000-yard winner, Keith Francis, will run the mile after having tuned up last week with a 4-minute, 5-second victory in the New England Intercollegiates. Villanova's hopes in the mile will be carried by Phil Kane, while Coghlan, who won the mile last year, will move up to the two-mile run, where he is an overwhelming favorite.

The keenest competition of the program is expected to be the 880-yard run, where Mark Belger, the Villanova sophomore from North Bellmore, L.I., is the slight favorite over Orlando Greene of Seton Hall, the Metropolitan and New Jersey intercollegiate 1,000-yard champion; Bill Dabney of Adelphi, the Metropolitan 880-yard champion; Charles Hedrick of Princeton, the Heptagonal champion, and Billy Martin, Boston College's freshman star who has run 2:09.6 for the 1,000 this ye[ar].

76ers Rally to Victory Over Pistons, 123-112

PHILADELPHIA, March 5 (UPI)—Doug Colins scored 11 points in the fourth period tonight to lead the Philadelphia 76ers to a 123-112 comeback victory over the Detroit Pistons.

Detroit led, 89-88, after three periods of play and had a 5-point advantage early in the final quarter when Collins sparked the Philadelphia attack.

Fred Carter of the 76ers and Bob Lanier of Detroit shared game scoring honors with 29 points each. George McGinnis had 25 for Philadelphia and Curtis Rowe had 24 for Detroit. Collins had 23.

Philadelphia led, 31-29, after the first quarter but the Pistons took over the halftime lead at 63-61.

Philadelphia outscored Detroit 35-23 in the fourth period as the 76ers won their 37th game of the season against 28 losses to move into full possession of second place in the National Basketball Association Atlantic Division.

Detroit, fighting for a position in the Western Division playoffs, is 25-37, three games behind the Midwest Division leader, Milwaukee.

N.Y.U. Leads Penn In Eastern Fencing

Special to The New York Times

ANNAPOLIS, Md., March 5—New York University, the defending team champion, held a narrow 53-52 lead over the University of Pennsylvania at the end of the first day of competition in the 79th annual Intercollegiate Fencing Association championships at the United States Naval Academy.

The Violets captured the épée team competition for the fourth consecutive year, amassing 26 points, one more than the Quakers. The two teams then tied for the team championship in foil with 27 points apiece. M.I.T. had been the foil champion the last two years. Princeton held down third place in the team standings with 45 points, followed by Navy, 44; Rutgers 43; Cornell 42; Harvard 41; Columbia 41; M.I.T. 30; Yale 27; City College 21; Army 18, and Dartmouth 11.

Finnish Skier Is First

LAHTI, Finland, March 5 (AP)—Juha Mieto of Finland won the 15-kilometer (9.3 miles) cross-country race at the International Lahti ski games today in 40 minutes 16.98 seconds. Yevgeny Belyayev, an Olympic silver medal winner from the Soviet Union, was second in 40:49.07 and Srto Koivisto of Finland, an Olympic bronze winner, was third in 40:52.95. No Americans were entered.

rookie center called up yesterday from Providence to spell Phil Esposito, also played when Espo found his ailing ankle too sore to skate every shift.

The Rangers continued their flat, up-tight play in the second period, managing only one shot in the first 8 minutes. Hilliard Graves raised the distance on goals scored by Atlanta to 60 feet when he shot a rising bullet from the blue line and beat Wilson.

Referee Bruce Hood called successive penalties on the Flames and the Rangers had a two-man advantage. But New York still couldn't get a shot on goal. When it became Atlanta's turn on the power play, Lysiak tallied his second goal, this time from close range.

Maryland Is Upset By Virginia

LANDOVER, Md., March 5 (AP)—Phil Ford scored 14 first-half points tonight as North Carolina opened a big lead and defeated Clemson, 82-74, in the semifinals of the Atlantic Coast Conference baketball tournament.

Virginia upset Maryland, 73-65, in the other semifinal before a crowd of 19,600 at the Capital Centre. Virginia, which had upset North Carolina State yesterday, plays North Carolina tomorrow for the conference title.

Ford, an all-A.C.C. choice as a sophomore, sank seven of his shots in the first half, which ended with North Carolina ahead, 43-34.

The Tar Heels, ranked No. 4 in the nation, led 16-14 when the 7-foot-1-inch Clemson center, Wayne (Tree) Rollins went to the bench with his third foul. North Carolina, with Ford contributing 6 points, stretch its advantage to 33-21 before Rollins returned.

Walter Davis scored 17 points for the Tar Heels, the A.C.C. regular-season champion, which drew a first-round bye in the tournament. Ford finished with 16 points and Mitch Kupchak had 13.

Hofstra 77, Lafayette 72

PHILADELPHIA, March 5 (AP)—Rich Laurel scored 25 points and led Hofstra to a 77-72 victory over Lafayette in an Eas Coast Conference semifinal tonight.

Hofstra took a 20-13 lead at 8:04 of the first half, but Lafayette, led by Todd Tripucka, came within 22-21 with 5:22 remaining.

John Irving had 19 points and 14 rebounds for Hofstra, now 17-11, while Tripucka, who fouled out with 4:20 left, had 24 points for Lafayette.

Penn 97, Columbia 84

Bill Jones, a senior, scored 29 points, his varsity best, and a teammate, Keven McDonald, a sophomore, added 26 as Pennsylvania defeated Columbia, 97-84, in an Ivy League game last night at Levien Gym. Jones tied his previous high before intermission, scoring 19 first-half points.

last year in the final of the E.C.A.C. Metropolitan Regional at the Garden and the Scarlet Knights won, 78-76, in overtime. Rutgers, undefeated through 27 games so far, is favored to repeat today and move on to play Princeton.

The possibility of playing Indiana had some effect on Frank Alagia, the spunky little guard for St. John's, who said, "I'd say somebody in the N.C.A.A. wants somebody in the East out quick. But we're not awed by Rutgers. The thing that makes draw [N.C.A.A. first-round opponent — Princeton or Indiana]."

Rutgers trounced Long Island University, 104-76, Thursday night in the first round of the E.C.A.C. playoffs at Princeton and St. John's walked a tight rope, as usual, before beating St. Peter's, 75-67, in the other E.C.A.C. Metro game.

Alagia said that St. John's chances against Rutgers depended upon the Redmen staying close. "They can run you off the court any time," the senior guard said. "We have to keep close until the end and, then, it's anybody's game."

Lou Carnesecca, the St. John's coach, said, "Rutgers will score 100 points on you, and score it any time—in the beginning, in the middle or in the end. You gotta watch out. They can kill you."

St. John's scores have been so close in most of its games, that the Redmen are not expected to run away from anybody. They are expected to play a deliberate game to keep within reach of the racing Scarlet Knights.

Tom Young, Rutgers' coach, said, "St. John's will try to keep us under 75 points and we'll try to get over 75 points. They'll hold the ball and work the freeze a lot."

Rutgers, which is accustomed to scoring more than 100 points a game, has an average victory margin exceeding 22 points, the highest in the nation. But the Knights, such as Phil Sellers, Mike Dabney, Ed Jordan, Hollis Copeland and Jim Bailey, can work a press defense that will beat a team as much as their offense does.

L.I.U. and St. Peter's will meet in a consolation game at the Garden at 1 P.M. today. Jim McDonald, St. Peter's coach, is hoping for an N.I.T. berth if the Peacocks beat L.I.U.

Rutgers fans, who talk as if their team can beat anybody, including Indiana, may have to wait for such a chance. The winner of the Rutgers-St. John's game would not play the Hoosiers in the N.C.A.A. tournament unless both teams reached the final game at Philadelphia, March 29.

The Rutgers-St. John's game will be televised by NBC (Channel 4 in New York) starting at 3 P.M. Although a large crowd is expected at the Garden for this game, there were tickets still available at the Garden last night.

Strike Spree for Bowler

TOLEDO, Ohio, March 5 (UPI) — John Pezzin, a 46-year-old Perrysburg, Ohio, bowler rolled 33 consecutive strikes last night in a sanctioned bowling league. Pezzin rolled games of 259, 300 and 300 for an 859 series.

Ballplayers' Stand Reported Tougher would become a free agent. However, the clubs could extend those limits to six and nine years through a method of contract maneuvers.

When Miller placed those ideas, and others, on the negotiating table, he stressed that the players actually weren't demanding anything (because they had the Andy Messersmith renewal clause ruling) but were offering the proposals to help meet the owners' demand for change.

Miller also has suggested that the owners were waiting for a ruling from the United States Court of Appeals of the Eighth Circuit on their Messersmith case appeal before they bent any further from their proposal of free agency after nine seasons in the majors.

The owners deny that, but whether they are waiting on the ruling or not, they won't know the opinion until, at the earliest, next week.

the earliest, next week. A Secretary to Judge Floyd Gibson said the three-judge panel was working on the case and hoped to get a ruling out next week.

The owners, meanwhile, have emabrked on a public relations campaign, bombarding news organizations and the public with both spoken and printed information explaining their side. Using an enlarged public relations staff, they have issued statements through a daily telephone recording.

In a telephone recording the other day, Gaherin, the owners' chief negotiator, was quoted as saying no progress had been made but "we have been bargaining on a parallel course."

The only trouble with parallel courses is that by definition they never meet. And it's obvious that the courses of the owners and players have not met despite 25 negotiating sessions and thousands of words.

Some observers of the negotiations have suggested that the two sides could have been close enough in their thinking by now at least to allow camps to be opened, but the hard-line owners have barred the way.

Earlier in the negotiations, those officials — reportedly August A. Busch Jr. of St. Louis, Bob Howsam of Cincinnati and Charles O. Finley of Oakland—apparently tried to replace Gaherin with, perhaps, Ted Kheel, who they felt would take a tougher stance against the Players Association.

However, they couldn't gain enough support from the other owners and instead had to settle for the addition of two officials to the Players Relations Committee, the group that steers negotiations.

Howsam, president of the Reds, was one of those additions, and he clearly is the toughest-talking member of the committee. He has been outspoken in his opinion of Miller and he is believed to have been behind the change in the mood of the talks earlier this week.

Monday's session produced some optimism among the members of the negotiating team—the six club officials don't sit in on the talks with the players' people—but by the time the negotiators met Wednesday, the situation had deteriorated.

It was believed that Howsam, perhaps not alone among the committee members who were in Florida, insisted that Gaherin, MacPhail and Charles (Chub) Feeney, president of the National League, get tougher with Miller. They got tougher, and now Miller apparently has decided to get just as tough by withdrawing the players' proposals.

The owners' negotiators told Miller, at the conclusion of yesterday's session, that they would call him during the weekend to schedule another meeting—after they had met with the Player Relations Committee.

Seaver Warns of a Jump If His Demand Isn't Met position". Things have changed. The owners of teams have no one to blame but themselves. Whoever is giving them their legal advice has led them to this point."

The stampede was started a year ago when the Yankees cutbid 22 other clubs and paid $3.75 million to Catfish Hunter for five years. Johnny Bench of the Cincinnati Reds signed recently for $200,000 and Fred Lynn, after one season as most valuable player and rookie of the year, is now demanding more than $1 million for three years with the Boston Red Sox.

"We are apart in our thinking on money," conceded Joe McDonald, general manager of the Mets, referring to Seaver. "I'm sitting back on things right now, but we have signed 29 players and we're fortunate they want to play in New York.

"Tom did propose a three-year contract and I said we wouldn't be opposed to it in his case. He wasn't asking for a million dollars or anything like that, but maybe now he's upped his price."

Paul: Finley Is Tampering

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla, March 5 (UPI)—Gabe Paul, president of the New York Yankees, charged Charles O. Finley today with "tampering" because the owner of the Oakland A's had sent Jim (Catfish) Hunter a 1976 Oakland contract.

Paul made the accusation in letters to Commissioner Bowie Kuhn and the American League president, Lee MacPhail. He termed Finley's action "a clear violation of tampering."

In a separate letter to Finley, Paul told the Oakland owner to "desist from any contact whatsoever with players on our roster and under contract to the New York Yankees."

Hunter was declared a free agent after the 1974 season when it was ruled that Finley had breached his contract by failure to make a $50,000 payment on time.

The Yankees won hunter's services in open bidding and signed him to a contract valued at $3.75 million. Hunter had a 23-14 won-lost record for New York last season.

Finley has kept insisting he'd get Hunter back.

When he received the Oakland contract, Hunter turned it over to his attorney, Carl-to Cherry of Ahoskie, N.C., who in turn wrote to Paul informing him of Finley's action.

Finley could be fined or suspended if Kuhn found him guilty of tampering.

Ashe Routs Newcombe; U.S. Pair Falls to face Stan Smith and Bob Lutz in a doubles match.

Newcombe and Roche, considered by many tennis observers the best doubles team in the world, defeated the Americans, 6-3, 3-6, 7-5; Australia thus reduced the United States' lead in the competition to 2-1.

After the singles match, Ashe explained his victory: "I think it was the combination of my serving well and the travel John went through that were in my favor. I played pretty well, so here I am, I guess."

Newcombe had logged 22 hours of flying time getting here from Australia (he arrived yesterday), but he refused to claim fatigue as an excuse for his play.

"I feel all right," Newcombe had said before the match. "But the danger is when you think you should feel tired. You might miss a shot and say you missed it because you were tired. It's like having a built-in excuse."

Newcombe needed no excuses because Ashe played so well. His serve kept Newcombe off balance in the first set, when he hit 13 outright winners. And his backhand smoked past Newcombe in the second set.

It was a match of strength against strength. Newcombe used his best weapon, his serve, against Ashe's best weapon, his back-hand. That was the dare, and Ashe accepted it.

"I wasn't that surprised that Newcombe kept forcing my back-hand, because his serve is one of the world's best," Ashe said. "But he didn't serve nearly as well as he usually does against me."

Ashe was in trouble only once in the first set, on his first service game. But he survived a break point and evened the set at 1-1, then broke Newcombe in the third game and again in the ninth game.

In the second set the two men — each playing No. 1 singles for his country—traded service victories for the first eight games. Then in the ninth, Ashe survived three bad forehand volleys and two break points and pulled out the game.

"A match-tough Newcombe woudn't have let me off the hook," Ashe said& referring to the fact that Newcombe has been off the tournament circuit since December.

Ashe rallied, breaking Newcombe and winning the match in the next game, getting the final point when Newcombe served up his second and last double fault of the match.

According to Newcombe, the match was "crucial" to the Australian effort to win the World Cup for the sixth time in seven years. "If I lost the match," Newcombe had said before it was played, "we lose the series."

Chile Leads Argentina

SANTIAGO, Chile, March 5 (UPI)—Chile took a 1-0 lead over Argentina today in the Davis Cup South American zone final. Argentina's ace Guillermo Vilas, was on the brink of winning the day's second singles match over Patricio Cornejo when it was suspended until tomorrow.

In the opening match, Chile's top ranked player, Jaime Fillol, overcame Ricardo Cano, 6-8, 6-1, 6-4, 6-2.

Vilas took the first set, 6-2, and the third, 6-1. Cornejo won the second, 8-6, and the fourth, 6-4. Vilas was leading the fifth set, 5-2.

make some bad club selections. He had an early tee time, and he felt rushed.

"I just couldn't get it going," he said of a round that included three bogeys against five birdies, "and I had the blahs."

Brewer, whose 11 tournament victories include the 1967 Masters, said his putting had been improving. He summarized his recent play this way:

"I've played well enough to win, but I've turned some 67-68 rounds into 72-73's. Years ago I used to turn the 72-73's into 67-68's. It's all chipping and putting."

Malverne Quintet, Freeport in Final

UNIONDALE, L. I., March 5—Freeport defeated Lynbrook, 73-72, and Malverne overcame Westbury, 60-43, today at the Nassau Coliseum and gained the final of the Nassau County scholastic basketball tournament.

Freeport, with a 20-2 won-lost record, was led by Howard Thompkins with 17 points and Jeff Rocke with 16. Tom Wilkinson of Lynbrook scored 32 points, 23 in the fourth quarter as his team almost overtook Freeport.

Malverne, which is 20-1, trailed at halftime, 25-22, but quickly gained the advantage after intermission. Malverne was paced by Charles Miller with 15 points and Lionel Harvey with 14. Ray Dumpson scored 12 for Westbury.

The championship game will take place at the Coliseum Sunday at 5 P.M., following the Suffolk title contest at 3 P.M. between Babylon and North Babylon.

Art: Portraits by Richard Yarde Evoke Black I

By HILTON KRAMER

Nothing is more difficult nowadays than to paint a portrait of a legendary figure of history, and make it pictorially as well as historically credible. Contemporary taste is suspicious of the kind of pictorial rhetoric that is called for in the portrayal of legendary personalities, and contemporary painting provides few useful precedents for its realization. The obvious temptation is to retreat into a pastiche of some earlier historical style, but the results are usually more pious than persuasive.

The paintings that Richard Yarde is currently showing at the Studio Museum of Harlem, 2033 Fifth Avenue at 125th Street, includes a number of large and ambitious portraits of nearly legendary black heroes—Jack Johnson, Marcus Garvey and an evangelical preacher by the name of Sweet Daddy Grace. Another semi-legendary career—that of the late Malcolm X—is evoked in a series of small, delicate watercolors entitled "The Rally."

The big portraits, although clearly the work of a gifted artist, are not, I think, a success. The watercolors — not only the "Rally" series, but, even more, the studies for the big pictures and the more intimate pictures based on old photographs and first-hand experience — are a distinct success. Once again, then, it is the personal voice of the artist rather than his attempt at a high-flown public utterance that is most persuasive.

Mr. Yarde does not, to be sure, take refuge in some distinct historical style for his big portraits. These paintings are executed in a distinctly modern idiom, with a great emphasis on vivid color, flat ornamental design and the kind of pictorial space we associate with abstract art. In the best of them indeed — the portrait of Sweet Daddy Grace — what is most compelling is the abundance of "abstract" detail, but the splendor of this detail has the effect of rendering the figure of Daddy Grace himself almost incidental.

There are problems in the handling of some of the other big paintings, too, not only the portraits. "The Mirror," presumably a self-portrait, seems to overcome these problems by virtue of its greater simplicity and directness. For the besetting sin of Mr. Yarde's painting style is a combination of clutter and turgidity.

These problems vanish when he turns to watercolor. Clarity, precision and a certain sweetness of feeling are the rule in the watercolors. This more intimate and meticulous medium, which does not permit any second thoughts, allows Mr. Yarde the expression of a lyrical, sometimes nostalgic evocation of experience that is sometimes very moving. There is a beautiful control in the watercolors one does not find in the bigger paintings.

Richard Yarde's "The Mirror" is at the Studio Museum

This is Mr. Yarde's first one-man show in New York, and it leaves one curious to see his future work. It remains on view through March 21.

Other exhibitions this week include the following:

Ilya Bolotowsky (Borgenicht, 1018 Madison Avenue at 78th Street): There is always something marvelous in watching an artist get stronger and better as he grows older, and Mr. Bolotowsky must now be included in this enviable category. Although he remains (more or less) a votary of the neo-plastic esthetic, with its rigid adherence to geometrical form, he achieves an extraordinary freedom—even a certain romanticism—within the boundaries of that style.

The present exhibition is, above all, an experience of color and light. The forms that contain these vibrant arrangements of yellows, reds and blues, often combined with black and white scaffoldings, may be straight-edge and determined by right angles, but they fill the eye with so rich a chromatic experience that we are scarcely aware of their rigid strategies. The rationality of the idea serves as a point of departure for the hedonism of the effect.

There are, incidentally, several superb examples of a genre that the artist has made his own: the free-standing vertical column, which functions as a three-dimensional painting in space without ever quite stepping over the boundary into sculpture.

Tom Doyle (55 Mercer Street): In the 1960's when so-called floor sculpture began to occupy a larger and larger place on the contemporary art scene, Mr. Doyle created some memorable ramp structures. These have sometimes bee

Aspects of American Realism, Grey Art Gallery and Study Center, Washington Place: One of the unsung resources of New York University is the collection of the Sara Roby Foundation, which is on view at this moment in the Gray Art Gallary, just a yard or two to the southeast of Washington Square. The collection stands for a kind of taste that is now out of fashion—summations of society, for instance, like Honore Sharrer's "Tribute to the American Working People" (1951) and Paul Cadmus's "Night in Bologna" (1958), in which an archetypal G.I. stands in archetypal loneliness while European womanhood has better things to do than answer to his call.

Whether fashionable or not, a painting like Jack Levine's "Inauguration" (1956-58) stands for a specific moment in American history; and on its first outing in nearly 20 years the collection is where it should be—midway between the Whitney uptown and the Whitney downtown. Through March 18.

Sylvia Mangold (Fischbach Gallery, 29 West 57th Street: Jasper Johns pre-empted the potential of the rule quite some time ago. But Sylvia Mangold has some elegant variations on the ways in which a ruler (supposedly one of the most exact things there are) can be pulled out of shape in the interests of perspective and painted in such a way as to deny its own nature. Most of her pictures correspond to instructions penciled at the bottom of the canvas, and their mating of trompe l'oeil with conceptual art is giving pleasure to a lot of people. Through March 13.

John Taylor Arms (A.A.A. Gallery, 663 Fifth Avenue, at 52d Street): John Taylor Arms (1887-1953) was arguably the most distinguished of the American full-time etchers of the 1920's. Today that may sound like faint praise, but at the time those sedulous needlemen were adulated. People just could not get over the fact that Arms would put in a total of 2,172 hours on a single plate (the townscape of Palencia in the A.A.A. show). He was a prodigious technician who could take a plate that measured ⅜ inch by ⅜ inch and turn out a townscape with figures that has to be magnified 10 times before we can really see what he was up to.

All this could be no more than freaky; but Arms's love for his subject matter comes through in even the most outrageous of his miniaturings. And when he was in France and spent week after week in the still unblemished cathedral towns of Normandy, he came home with plates that witness irreplaceably the look of townscapes that vanished forever during World War II. Anyone who prizes Henry James's "A Little Tour in France" as one of the best books of its kind will enjoy this show. Through March 20.

Dance: Pilobolus Images

'Untitled' Opens Fare at Brooklyn Academy

By CLIVE BARNES

The ways of destiny are mysterious. The Pilobolus Dance Theter has existed, happily even triumphantly, for nearly five years. It has appeared around town, been praised in the United States and in Europe. Yet I had never seen it until last night at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Everyone had told me about the company, but the uncertain trajectory of our schedules had somehow never coincided. It was clearly my loss.

It is a company of four men and two women. The men are gymnastically inclined, and the women appear slightly ironical about it. Originally the group consisted simply of four men—all Dartmouth graduates, amateurs fired by Terpsichore—but now that seems, to a johnny-come-lately unthinkable. For so much of the company's humor—and it is a group that appears to live on its wits as much as trade on its movements—is based on the differences of men and women and their progress through life and space. The four energetic men and the two watchful, but nifty, women, now look essential to the Pilobolus view of the world and its fauna.

Perhaps this view is most clearly expressed in the company's new work, which opened the program, and is called, disarmingly, "Untitled." The choreography is by the company itself—most of their work is communal—and its consists of two women, capable of almost limitless extension because they are carried on the backs of two men and their two top-hatted suitors.

Dance metaphor thy name must be Pilobulus! for so much of the dramatic action in "Untitled," all of it brilliantly expressed in movement, is concerned with vivid images of dance, crystalline little moments of expression concerned here with a kind of Thurberlike view of the war between men and women.

The style of the program is remarkably constant, yet never boringly so. Despite the male/female perceptions, most of the company's dances concern the relationship of friendship rather than love. The technical essence of the troupe is that the four men are only partially trained as dancers (it seems to be a partiality jealously preserved) but are superb gymnasts. As a result their deftness, their agility, even their lithe elegance, is endowed with a certain endearing amateurishness, from which derives much of their humor.

The Program

PILOBOLUS DANCE THEATER, with Robert Morgan Barnett, Alison Chase, Martha Clarke, Moses Pendleton, Michael Tracy and Jonathan Wolken. Lighting design, Pilobolus Dance Theater; costumes designed by Malcolm McCormick. At the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

UNTITLED, choreographed and danced by the company; music, Robert Dennis.

PSEUDOPODIA, choreographed and danced by Mr. Wolken; music, Mr. Pendleton and Mr. Wolken.

ALRAUNE, choreographed and danced by Miss Chase and Mr. Pendleton; music, Mr. Dennis.

WALKLYNDON, choreographed and danced by the company.

PAGLIACCIO, choreographed and danced by Mr. Clarke.

OCELLUS, choreographed and danced by Mr. Barnett, Mr. Pendleton, Mr. Tracy and Mr. Wolken; music, Mr. Pendleton and Mr. Wolken.

MONKSHOOD'S FAREWELL, choreographed and danced by the company.

The tone of the dancing is unabashedly physical. Bodies catapult and somersault, turn cartwheels and spin with gymnasium ease through a strange new world of dance. The company seems almost more like a team than a troupe, which is its particular charm, and more like a concept than a team that is its particular value.

There are very few groups that stop to question the kinetic values of dance, and the Pilobus cooperative appears to be one of those few. It suggests that movement can be as easily connected with movement—as in a gymnasium—as with space. This is in conflict with the ideas of the dance class and all those theatrical cubes and kinetic parabolas. Interestingly, the spartan comedy of the Piloblus approach is constantly being lightly underscored by the presence of the two women dancers, who certainly join in, but in a tellingly different style. The method can be seen to perfection in the program's final work, overlong but witty, "Monkshood's Farewell." It is the gusto of novely observed by the awareness of experience.

Israel Objects to Sale Of U. S. Planes to Egypt

WASHINGTON, March 5 (Reuters)—Israel formally objected tonight to the proposed United States sale of six C-130 transport planes to Egypt, saying it was opposed to any military-supply relationship between Washington and Cairo.

The Israeli Ambassador, Simcha Dinitz, met secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger for 90 minutes tonight to convey his Government's official objections to the contemplated sale.

"I think I put before him the reasons for our concern over such a precedent," Mr. Dinitz said after the meeting.

GOING OUT Guide

HIGH FLYING Sonja Henie is a name seldom mentioned these days amid all the movie nostalgia. For that matter, the ice-skater's films don't often appear on television anymore. The Sky Rink, that perennial midtown haven for ice-cutters, tonight is featuring a musical "Salute to Sonja Henie" with a jazz-band performance, including a number of songs from the skater's movies.

Leading the music will be Joe Newman, with Don Rondo and Sol Yaged on clarinet, Bernie Privin, trumpet, and Mannie Thayler and Harry DeVito, trombones. The jazz package is being presented by Doc Winter, former leader of Glenn Miller's Army Air Forces Military Band.

Skate-rental, checking and snack-bar facilities will be available during the program, from 8 to 10 o'clock. Tickets are $5. The Sky Rink is in the 16th-floor penthouse at 450 West 33d Street, between Ninth and 10th Avenues.

FROM WAY BACK As its second American work this season saluting the Bicentennial, the Bel Canto Opera Company is staging the rarely presented "The King's Henchman" tonight and next Saturday at 7:30 P.M. and tomorrow and next Sunday at 3 P.M. With music by Deems Taylor and a libretto by Edna St. Vincent Millay, the opera, a medieval romance set in Cornwall, opened here at the Metropolitan on Feb. 17, 1927. The reviewer for The New York Times called it "the most effectively and artistically wrought American opera that has reached the stage," but the work remained in the Metropolitan repertory only three years.

Lloyd Walser of the New York City Opera is conducting the revival, which Stafford Foss has staged, with a roster of singers headed by Harlan Foss, David Barren, Jeanne Bowers, Marianne Burke and David Bezzona.

Admission is $4. Reservations: 889-6366.

ROLL 'EM Videotape fans should find a variety of subjects at the second Documentary Video Festival, just under way in four Friday-through-Sunday sessions through the end of the month at Global Village, 454 Broome Street, at Mercer. As with last year's program at the SoHo auditorium, the occasion is a showcase for video productions, including many independent works, and an exchange of ideas. The sponsor is the Video Study Center.

Approximately 65 tapes are on this year's bill, ranging from 8 to 60 minutes, and predominantly American. Several entries are from the West Coast and a number from Europe. Featured tomorrow afternoon will be a special women's documentary section.

Friday and Saturday programs start at 8 P.M. Sunday programs begin at midday and last until mid or late afternoon.

Admission is $1. For more festival information call 966-7526.

TONES AND TURNS Holi, one of the liveliest of festivals held in India and marked by a spirit of love and good will, is being celebrated tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock with a program of native folk music and dances presented by the India Club of Columbia University. The event, which also includes an Indian movie with English subtitles, takes place in the Wollman Auditorium at Broadway and 115th Street.

Admission is $2. More information is at 280-4857.

A musical evening centered on the Dada movement and linking compositions of that period to a particular artist is scheduled for 8 P.M. tomorrow and Monday at the Clocktower Gallery, 108 Leonard Street, at the corner of Broadway, south of Canal Street. The 75-minute program has been researched and reconstructed by Eherhard Blum, a scholar on European contemporary music, and spans music from 1913 (Marcel Duchamp) to 1958 (Man Ray).

Admission is $3.

The Clocktower is the exhibition space of the Institute for Art and Urban Resources. The program has been made possible with the cooperation of Goethe House, the German cultural-affairs center.

A free program of Javanese dance and music takes place at 3 P.M. today in the New York Public Library's Donnell Center at 20 West 53d Street.

Screen: 'Man Friday'

O'Toole, Roundtree in A 'Crusoe' Version

By VINCENT CANBY

Some good people, including Peter O'Toole and Richard Roundtree, the stars, and Jack Gold, the director, have entered into a collaboration that brings out the worst in each of them. It's called "Man Friday" and it opened yesterday at Loews Astor Plaza and Tower East Theaters.

"Man Friday," written by Adrian Mitchell, is Daniel Defoe's "Robinson Crusoe" with a dopily raised consciousness—the story of the once-great, resourceful, 18th-century shipwreck survivor told from the point of view of his native manservant, Friday. In this version, Friday becomes a sort of exotic flower child who values fun, laughter, song and sex-without-guilt, while poor old Crusoe is an uptight, mean-spirited, self-righteous, Bible-quoting bigot.

The time is still the early 18th century, but the witlessness is strictly of the 1960's. While Crusoe (Mr. O'Toole) tries to teach Friday (Mr. Roundtree) the meaning of private ownership, money, sin, work and sportsmanship, Friday, just as unsuccessfully, attempts to liberate Crusoe from his hang-ups. This reversal of roles might possibly have stimulated George Bernard Shaw to an interesting idea or two, but it does nothing for Mr. Mitchell, whose screenplay is a spinoff from

The Cast

MAN FRIDAY, directed by Jack Gold; screenplay by Adrian Mitchell, based on "Robinson Crusoe," by Daniel Defoe; produced by David Korda; executive producers, Jules Buck and Gerald Green; director of photography, Alex Phillips; music and songs, Carl Davis; editor, Anne Coates; a presentation of I.T.C. and Keep Films in association with ABC Entertainment, distributed by Avco Embassy Pictures. Running time: 109 minutes. At Loews Tower East Theater, Third Avenue near 72d Street, and Loews Astor Plaza Theater, 44th Street west of Broadway. This film has been rated PG.

The movie, which was photographed prettily in Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, seems to have been carefully aimed about two inches over the heads of an audience of 8-year olds. There are some incidental songs in it that I can imagine being sung better by animated rabbits than by Mr. Roundtree. There is also a lot of smug discourse, the tedium of which is occasionally relieved by ludicrous inspiration, as when Friday offers his body and his love to Crusoe when he finds his master flagellating himself for having had an "immoral dream."

Mr. O'Toole looks and sounds right, and he might have made a fine Crusoe in a film of fewer confusions and pretensions. Mr. Roundtree, whose first "Shaft" film had a good deal of style, has a terrible time trying to mime a primitive man's saintliness. Mostly he chooses to look baffled. He wrinkles his brow, cocks his head to one side and assumes a quizzical expression. The last actor to get away with this was Lassie.

The Stage: 'Maggie Flynn'

Equity Library Revives Musical of 1968

By RICHARD EDER

The most theatrical, the most touching moment in the Equity Library Theater's revival of the 1968 musical "Maggie Flynn" comes in the intermission. To the tune of "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp, the Boys Are Marching," and with enormous glee, the actors march out and sing a ditty beginning "Fill, Fill, Fill Our Little Baskets."

It isn't simply that they sing it with more verve and charm than they have managed up to that point. It's that for a moment they are able to lay down the great corpse of a musical they've been trundling about and strike a spark of life.

The Equity Library Theater, which gives New York actors a chance to show their stuff and has started a number of good ones on their professional way, is indeed short of funds. "Fill, Fill," had the useful immediacy of street singing: It sounded good and it made money. The baskets were quickly filled.

As for the performance, it has some good things in it, but mainly it's a failure. The chief trouble is the vehicle: It is more hopeful than sensible to think most plays can be revived. Most can't. The mouth-to-mouth resuscitation given by the enthusiastic and, in some cases, talented company to "Maggie" hardly floats up a hiccup.

It was long outdated when it was written. It has the stock emotional formula of 1940's and 50's musicals: back and forth between mawkish and manic. The writing is desperately tired, and though a few of the songs have energy, they don't have much else.

"Maggie," set in New York at the time of the Civil War, is about a woman who runs an orphanage for the children of runaway slaves. Maggie, the protagonist, is simultaneously loved by a handsome Union colonel and her raffish husband, a clown by trade, who left her but wants to come back. There are complications, including the use of her basement by two Confederate spies and an anti-black riot by Maggie's Irish neighbors, who resent being drafted for the war.

Maggie is that familiar figure in the musical, the Wonderful Person. Played by Bette Glenn, she manages Nice, but not Wonderful. She doesn't create the fuss she's supposed to. As her husband, Ross Petty is just the other way around—too noisy and exuberant. Yet as he wheels about in his clown role, he is always watching to see where he is going to land.

Some of the minor actors do better. Nita Novy, Linda Kampley and Cathy Roskam all have good moments in multiple roles. The set, designed by Richard Williams, uses a splendid device: three translucent panels that reflect all kinds of light and moods and serve as doors and windows as well.

The staging, though crowded at first—some of the early choreography resembles a trade school breaking for lunch — improves. A final riot scene is a fine example of disciplined and understated action used to convey violence.

The Dance: Harlem Troupe at Its Best

By ANNA KISSELGOFF

The Dance Theater of Harlem, now finishing the second of its five weeks at the Uris Theater, came up with an exciting program and some of its best dancing Thursday night.

If there is a company that knows how to put the allegro into "Allegro Brillante," one of George Balanchine's most dazzling ballets, it is this joyful ensemble. Anyone looking for a special program during this season should make a point of choosing one with "Allegro Brillante" on it.

On this particular program, the newsworthy item was the premiere of "Romeo and Juliet," a pas de deux by Gabriella Taub-Darvash that deals with the balcony scene from the Prokofiev ballet score.

Madame Taub-Darvash, who now teaches here and has also coached American dancers in recent years, received her ballet training in her native Rumania and the Soviet Union. The Soviet influence in this duet, itself based on a Soviet original, came as no surprise, and Madame Taub-Darvash handled its special style with skill and flair. It is also a style — with acrobatic lifts and emotional nuances to the movement — that is new to the company and one in which its dancers still have to feel more at ease.

Nonetheless, the lovely Lydia Abarca and the gifted Paul Russell did well enough, keeping the mood suitably lyric. In time, they might want to be less cautious, giving more flow to the choreography whose phrases now look too sectioned off.

Another pas de deux on the program was the famous showpiece from "Don Quixote," and it was danced exhilaratingly and with such style by M. Elena Carter and Joseph Wyatt that one wanted to see it all over again.

It is in the Balanchine repertory, however, that the company stars and shows its individuality. In addition to "Allegro Brillante," it presented the season's first performance of Mr. Balanchine's "Bugaku." The company takes a less stylized approach than the New York City Ballet to the mating rite that is imbedded in this pastiche of a Japanese court ceremony. This is just as well. "Bugaku" has always been one of the sexiest ballets in the international repertory, and the Harlem Dance Theater's revuelike presentation is not alien to its real point of view.

The steps, of course, are the same. These things are merely a matter of emphasis and not of one company doing something better than another. Miss Abarca was kittenish as the geisha, with a self-awareness that showed her having the role down perfectly. There was something charming about Ronald Perry's eagerness as her lover.

G.O.P. KICKBACKS ARE CHARGED TO 8

indictments had been returned by the Nassau grand jury charging three present and two former Town of Hempstead officials with soliciting money for the Republican county committee.

Among those named in the Nassau indictments was Mr. Graber. Also indicted on misdemeanor charges involving alleged violations of the state's civil rights law were William Landman, 47, of Merrick, L. I., the town's Commissioner of Sanitation, and Harold L. Haff, 59, of Oceanside, the town's Commisioner of Highways.

Two others named in the Nassau indictments were not identified because they were not in custody. They were said to be a former commissioner and a former deputy commissioner.

The indictments by the grand juries culminated repeated charges made by Nassau Democrats and other individuals that the Republican organization had requested the kickbacks as a means of county or town employees' obtaining favored treatment.

Among those who made the original charges in the alleged kickbacks was Matthew Bonora of Wantagh, L. I., former head of the Nassau County Police Department's homicide squad and later executive director of a citizens' watchdog group called AWARE, which was concerned with political corruption.

Mr. Bonora took sworn statements from 20 to 30 county or town employees and the results of polygraph tests, and turned them over to Mr. Trager's office.

In announcing the indictments, Mr. Trager had special praise for J. Wallace LaPrade, special agent in charge of the New York office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. More than 100 F.B.I. agents conducted the investigation into the kickback allegations for more than a year.

Mr. Trager said he would not act on the Federal indictments until Mr. Dillon had completed his case against those involved in the Nassau indictments.

Legal Questions Cited

"There are serious legal questions concerning Federal jurisdiction with regard to the Federal Extortion Act," Mr. Trager said. Under the act, there would have to be a showing of interstate commerce.

In a statement from his office in Hempstead, Mr. Margiotta said he was "dismayed" at the indictments handed up today against the Republican Party employee and Hempstead town and former town employees.

He added that he could not discuss the merits of the charges "for fear of prejudicing the cases."

However, he added: "I knew all of these men personally. I grew up with Don Woolnough and retained him in his present job after I became party chairman nine years ago.

"These are all men of integrity, men who have dedicated their lives to public service as well as participating in the political process of this nation. I'm certain that they will be vindicated in the fullness of time."

During the Federal investigation, Mr. Margiotta waived immunity and testified. It was always his position that no employees had ever been coerced into making donations to the Republican Party and had done so only of their own volition.

Francis T. Purcell, the Republican Presiding Supervisor of the Town of Hempstead, refused comment today, saying only that the town employees named in the indictments would continue in their positions.

Generally, in both indictments, the time of the alleged kickbacks ranged from 1970 to 1975.

The defendants in Nassau were charged with violation of Section 107 of the Civil Service Law.

The indicted town officials were charged with notifying and collecting from subordinants in their departments contributions on behalf of the county Republican committee.

Today's indictments, which had been expected by county political observers for some time, were the severest blow ever suffered by the Nassau Republican Party. The local Democrats are expected to use the indictments as ammunition against the Republicans in the November races for the Legislature and Congress.

Stanley Harwood, the Nassau Democratic chairman, was unavailable for comment.

The Federal penalties for the felony crime of perjury are a maximum of five years in jail, a $10,000 fine, or both. On the local misdemeanor charges, the maximum penalty is one year in prison, a $1,000 fine, or both.

City Acts on Charge of Market Bribery

legations in detail, but said of the lease transactions: "It's just gross, typical bumbling by the city. It's their fault. If there are problems, it's of their making."

In his affidavit, Mr. Scoppetta recalled Arol's approach to the city in 1970. Among the "inducements" offered by Arol, he said, "was a promise to provide 1,500 fully developed parking spaces for use by the New York Yankees at the adjoining Yankee Stadium."

The promise was maintained in drafts of the lease, but disappeared from the version that was signed in May 1972, according to the Commissioner. At the same time, he said, officials were warning Mr. Patton of "a potential conflict" between the market lease and the one being negotiated with the Yankees, which promised them the same parking area within the market.

Opposition by Counsel

The affidavit said that on May 1, 1972, the day the market lease was to be signed, the agency's counsel, Stephen Salup, advised Mr. Patton not to sign it, because of the conflect and because of a provision that excused Arol from compliance with the development plan "which had originally been the stated purpose for leasing this valuable piece of city-owned waterfront property."

"Despite these warnings," it went on, Mr. Patton signed the 99-year lease and subsequently granted an option to the Yankees on the parking site within the market.

Mr. Scoppetta said that after 15 months of negotiations the city amended the market lease, assuming "more than $6.5 million worth of Arol's obligations in order to regain the land which the city, through [the Economic Development Administration] had leased to Arol despite repeated warning."

Cost Put at $10 Million

The offices of Mr. Cunningham, the state and Bronx County Democratic chairman, and Mr. Patton, who is now president of the Real Estate Board of New York, did not respond to telephoned requests for comment.

A study of archives by The New York Times has put the total cost to the city of the lease amendments at well above $10 million, not counting the interest on the city's investment or the loss of potential tax revenues.

Mr. Scopetta's affidavit says: "This department is currently in receipt of certain information alleging that these lease transactions occurred as a result of an illegal payment of money made by or on behalf of the Arol Development Corporation to one or more former or present employees of the City of New York."

Commissioner Scopetta said his office was also investigating complaints from merchants in the market that Arol had failed to perform required repairs and construction, and that its conduct might have driven tenants out and caused a tax loss to the city.

He added that he needed Arol's records to check these complaints and "to determine the extent to which Arol was ever prepared to perform its obligations."

Mr. Scoppetta disclosed that David Buntzman and his son Arol, the principal officers of Arol Development, had cited the Fifth Amendment in refusing to answer questions and surrender certain documents, and had argued that delivery of some of them would violate the confidential lawyer-client privilege.

The Investigation Commissioner said he sought only corporate papers, and he asked that the court examine those claiming the protection of the lawyer-client relationship, to determine the validity of that claim.

In a separate case, Mr. Cunningham has been subpoenaed by Maurice H. Nadjari, the special state prosecutor, to appear before a special grand jury investigating the alleged sale of judgeships in the Bronx.

Cunningham Motion Questions Nadjari Authority and Motives

By MARCIA CHAMBERS

Patrick J. Cunningham, the state Democratic chairman, filed an extensive motion yesterday with the Appellate Division of State Supreme Court, attacking the authority and motives of Maurice H. Nadjari, the special state prosecutor, in seeking his appearance before a special grand jury investigating the alleged sale of judgeships in the Bronx.

Mr. Cunningham, who is also his party's Bronx County leader, is seeking a reversal of a lower-court order requiring him and three other Bronx Democrats to appear before the special grand jury. Oral arguments are scheduled before the appellate bench Thursday.

Two of the three others—Councilman Jerry L. Crispino and Gerald V. Esposito, a Bronx district leader—joined in Mr. Cunningham's 57-page motion. The third, Paul Victor, chairman of the county Democratic organization's law committee, filed papers separately.

Gregory J. Perrin, who has represented Mr. Cunningham since he began his fight to dismiss his subpoena early last January, said the issues before the appellate bench were similar to those raised before Justice Leonard H. Sandler of State Supreme Court, who presides over Mr. Nadjari's grand juries. Justice Sandler on Feb. 19 ordered Mr. Cunningham and the three other Bronx Democrats to appear before the panel.

While the legal issues may have been the same, the emphasis in this set of papers was different from that of earlier court documents. In this set the lawyers seem to dwell on the effect of Section 22 of the Election Law, which says that political party officers automatically forfeit their office if they refuse to testify or to sign a waiver of immunity against subsequent criminal prosecution.

Mr. Perrin said that Mr. Nadjari had made "no secret of his intention to hold the above quoted statute over petitioners' head to coerce a waiver of immunity." Mr. Cunningham, who is a target of the inquiry, has said he will not sign a waiver.

Mr. Perrin also repeated an earlier argument that the subpoena had been issued in bad faith for the purpose of embroiling Mr. Cunningham "in the controversy regarding whether or not he would execute a waiver of immunity."

Justice Sandler had rejected this argument, saying Mr. Perrin and members of Mr. Nadjari's staff had several discussions concerning a "mutually accepted waiver of immunity." Mr. Perrin also said Mr. Nadjari lacked authority to conduct the investigation — an argument that Justice Sandler denied.

Bridge: Covering Honor With H... Complex and at Times W...

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

Covering honors with honors is a more complex subject than one might think, and there are times when the play that appears right is wrong and vice versa.

Suppose that dummy on your right leads an unsupported jack, and that you have A-Q-x-x-x. Clearly it would be right to play low if your partner held a singleton king, but suppose that you decide to cover.

It seems normal to play the ace, but that can be wrong. It was wrong on the diagramed deal that helped Alvin Roth and Edith Sacks to win the Greater New York open pairs at the New York Hilton Hotel a week ago.

Spade King Led

Roth, as South, reached three no-trump with great speed. West led the spade king, and the ace was held up until the third round.

The declarer's prospects were not good. If West held an entry for his spades, in the form of the club ace or a guarded club queen, the contract was doomed. So South had to proceed on the assumption that East held both missing club honors.

The gods of the game were on the declarer's side in the club suit, and the contract was makable. With a little help from the opponents, Roth emerged with an overtrick, greatly helping his match-point score.

Play of Ace Wrong

The A-K of hearts were cashed and the club jack was led from the dummy. East would have been wrong to play low, and he made the normal play of the ace, but this turned out to be wrong, too. He shifted to a diamond, and Roth took his red-suit winners, ending in the dummy. The positive this:

1,500 Detroit Employees To Be Laid Off April 1

DETROIT, March 6 (AP) — From 1,500 to 2,000 city employees will be laid off April 1 to help cut Detroit's budget deficit, according to Deputy Mayor William Beckham Jr.

In addition, 1,500 to 2,000 workers or more—including at least 825 policemen—will be laid off July 1, he added.

"This is it," Mr. Beckham said Tuesday. "We don't have the money. We've waited for the Federal Government and we've waited for the state. We have to begin to make the cutbacks."

Books of The Times

Next Year in St. Petersburg

By ANNA KISSELGOFF

BAGAZH. By Nicolas Nabokov. 307 pages. Illustrated. Atheneum. $12.95.

This selective autobiography by the other Nabokov is concerned only occasionally with ballet—it touches more upon social history—but it is written by a composer whose career can be identified with three controversial landmark ballets.

The most recent is George Balanchine's 1965 "Don Quixote," for which Nicolas Nabokov wrote a commissioned score that collects an annual quota of critical brickbats for its "Hollywood" flavor. Nonetheless, "Don Quixote" remains a fixture of the New York City Ballet, which celebrated its move to the New York State Theater with this full-length narrative work so startling to adherents of Mr. Balanchine's one-act plotless ballets.

In 1934, Mr. Nabokov (composer), Archibald MacLeish (librettist) and Léonide Massine (choreographer) scooped Mr. Balanchine and Ruth Page by several months to create what the author calls "the first truly American ballet." This was "Union Pacific," whose Americana subject amid the Russian-French repertory of the Hurok-sponsored Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo caused a certain sensation. "Union Pacific" has since had a bad press.

This has been less true of "Ode," which probably never deserved the lack of understanding that greeted it in 1928 with Serge Diaghilev's Ballets Russes in Europe. "Ode," also choreographed by Mr. Massine, was Mr. Nabokov's first ballet, and there is every reason to believe that with its light-show projections by Pavel Tchelitchev, the ballet was merely ahead of its time. "Ode" was Mr. Nabokov's first claim to fame.

Drawn to the Ballet

So although Nicolas Nabokov, a first cousin of the novelist Vladimir Nabokov and past secretary general of the now defunct Congress for Cultural Freedom, has also written two operas, two oratorios and other music, he is (like many Russian-born figures in the arts) inevitably drawn to the ballet.

"Bagazh" ("Baggage" in Russian) even raises the idle question why the relatively few memoirists in the world of ballet so often write the same book twice.

Agnes de Mille has regaled us from volume to volume with, among other things, her deepening perspective on Uncle Cecil. Serge Lifar has given us a personal view of the Diaghilev company more than once, as has the respected British ballet historian, Cyril Beaumont. Alexandre Bénois, the Russian painter and stage designer who introduced Diaghilev to ballet in the first place, wrote two sets of reminiscences. Now Mr. Nabokov offers a sequel to his "Old Friends and New Music," published in 1951, part of which reappears here in what he calls "this new and different context."

The vignettes and anecdotes are still there. Friends, associates and chance acquaintances with names like Rasputin, Stravinsky, Diaghilev, Rilke, Kessler, Balanchine—and after the emigration to the United States in 1933—Charles Thayer, Mary McCarthy, Isaiah Berlin and W. H. Auden pass through this volume with disquieting superficiality.

Yet the "different context" is what "Bagazh" is truly about and what makes its first half and epilogue so interesting. To describe the introductory chapters on childhood life in pre-Revolutionary Russia as nostalgic would be inaccurate. The real thrust of this volume is the author's confessional conclusion that after 56 years in emigration (he calls himself a cosmopolitan, not an émigré), he has remained a Russian.

Mr. Nabokov sums it all up in a revealing epilogue—an open letter to a representative of a regime he loathes: Pyotr Abrassimov, one-time Soviet Ambassador in Berlin, whom Mr. Nabokov grew to admire and respect. The author describes his first return to Russia, in 1967, since he fled the Bolshevik Revolution with his family in 1919.

A Crucial Irony

Inevitably, Leningrad—still St. Petersburg to him—appeared a shell "with its spirit and soul gone forever." He addressed the Ambassador: "My Jerusalem is St. Petersburg. Because, as you yourself said in your direct, pragmatic way, this is the culture to which I and my whole family, with all its atavisms, belong. This is the culture that nurtured us and the likes of us in our Russian Diaspora."

A crucial irony is that like many Russians, Mr. Nabokov has very little Russian "blood" and his childhood and adolescence were spent among relatives of German stock. It was, again ironically, the revolution and its émigré future that allowed him to draw closer to the Nabokov branch of the family headed by Vladimir's father. It was only during the first years in exile in Berlin that he found himself part of "a truly Russian home."

Previously he had been surrounded by relatives named Falz-Fein, Knauff, Muller and von Peucker. His link to the Nabokovs had been loosened by the early divorce of his mother and his father, Dimitri Nabokov.

The author gives us a sophisticated and vivid picture of what life was for this wealthy minority of Western European origins, plunked down amid the Russian peasants and the Jewish villages of the Pale of Settlement. This is not to suggest that he describes the life of the villagers. The title of this book refers to the baggage that went on all those joyful childhood peregrinations from one country estate to another.

Nobody's fool, Mr. Nabokov knows very well that the Russian culture he cherishes was not represented by this class but rather by the intelligentsia symbolized by the Nabokov clan.

The elder Vladimir Nabokov was killed in Berlin as he heroically shielded Pavel Milyukov, the Russian liberal leader, from a Russian right-wing assassin's bullet. In Russia, grandmother Falz-Fein was murdered during the Revolution.

The personal story that Mr. Nabokov tells so fluently is as complex as the events that surrounded it.

HOUSING ACTIVISTS RELATIVELY QUIET

Spokesmen for Poor Are in New Programs Now

By ERNEST HOLSENDOLPH
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 5—The problem of housing the nation's poor, always difficult but considerably worse during the recent recession, has produced none of the stirring calls for remedial action that might be expected in a Presidential election year.

Instead, persons knowledgeable about the subject agree, there is relative silence. Where have all the activists gone?

Harlem's Jesse Gray is spending much of his time now at a hideaway in the Catskills. John Hampton, between his days of foraging around the country for financial help for the National Tenants Organization, sits in a cluttered one-room office here with a silent mimeograph machine.

The philanthropic foundations, which once funded housing groups, are now focusing on self-help programs. The Ford Foundation, for instance, now supports a successful tenant management experiment in a St. Louis public housing project.

Funding Disappeared

All the while, however, low to moderate-income people are having as hard a time as ever finding decent housing that doesn't cost up to a half of their family income, housing specialists say.

The activist housing secretaries of the 1960's—Robert Weaver and George Romney are gone, and the Department of Housing and Urban Development has changed from a builder of subsidized housing to an agency that talks about rent subsidies, even though there is evidence that not enough affordable housing exists — even with the help to pay the rents.

Mr. Weaver now teaches in Hunter College's urban affairs program. And Mr. Romney spends his time promoting voluntary agencies around the country.

In a recent interview in his Madison Avenue office, Professor Weaver said: "Most of my old associates are now in offices up and down Connecticut Avenue [in Washington] waiting for the phone to ring with the news that the regime has changed."

An official with the National League of Cities here, which has been critical of the Federal housing assistance effort, put it another way: "The truth is that the old housing lobby doesn't really know where the new housing situation is headed."

There is evidently plenty of local activism in housing, according to Mr. Hampton, who said his records showed tenant groups in 47 states, numbering well over 400 now. But the money to finance a national coordinating agency is gone. The National Tenant Organization was promised $100,000 by H. R. Crawford, the recently deposed H.U.D. manager of housing properties. The money apparently faded when he left, Mr. Hampton said.

Tax Law Cited

Congress, which appropriated the money that helped to finance thousands of units of individual and multifamily housing for moderate-income people in the 1960's, and passed the optimistic housing law of 1968 that set high production goals for the 1970's, has fallen into disarray.

Scandals and mismanagement, still echoing in Detroit, Chicago and elsewhere, served to blunt Congressional enthusiasm, veteran observers say, and influenced Congress to go along with the Nixon Administration plan to gear down H.U.D.'s subsidized construction programs.

There are several other reasons offered to account for the low-profile of would-be lobbyists for housing for the poor. Changes in the tax law in 1969 that restrirted foundation gifts to lobbying groups such as tenant organizations and the National Welfare Rights Organization was a leading factor.

Such factors and continued embarrassment about the gaffes and scandals associated with earlier ambitious programs have served to undercut the housing lobby.

Oakley Hunter, an old-line Republican who heads the Federal National Mortgage Association, put it succinctly in a recent speech:

"We are in a period when clouds of doubt and discouragement have obscured, for many of the organizations and individuals concerned with housing, those rays of hope that are essential if they are to find their way to consensus that makes fruitful action possible."

Local Housing Officials

Mr. Hunter was speaking to a meeting of the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment, whose members are the local housing officials around the country.

"Citizens feel a since of helplessness and hopelessness," said Professor Weaver, "and even blacks and other minorities who have the most to benefit from workable programs are saying 'nothing works'.

The Trenton Times Is Limited by Court In Covering a Trial

Special to The New York Times

TRENTON, March 5—A Mercer County judge yesterday ordered The Trenton Times to limit its coverage of an ongoing murder trial to the evidence taken in the presence of the jury.

The newspaper, which is owned by the Washington Post Company, said today that it would appeal, but that it would abide by the ruling of Judge Harvey S. Moore, pending a hearing in the state appeals court.

Thomas C. Jamieson Jr., the lawyer for the newspaper, said that the order violated the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

"This order does irreparable harm to the press and the public which it serves," Mr. Jamieson said. "The court's claim the publication would prejudice the Sixth Amendment right to a fair trial is just an assumption."

It is the second time in less than a month that a New Jersey judge has issued a gag order against newspapers. The first order, issued by Somerset County Judge Wilfred P. Diana, who has since been confirmed as a State Superior Court judge, is also under appeal.

Last week, Judge Moore directed The Trenton Times not to publish a remark that he had made in court outside the presence of the jury in another case, but the newspaper published it.

The judge said that the publication of the remark had forced him to sequester the jury, which was trying two prison guards accused of brutality.

Sequestering a jury is costly, the judge said. He indicated that if the newspaper paid the cost of sequestering the jury in the current murder trial he might rescind the gag order.

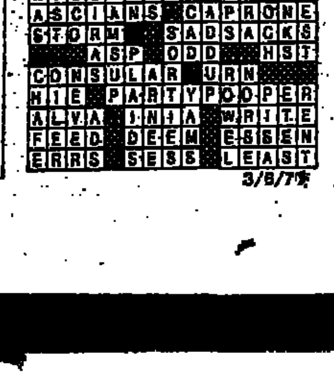
ANSWER TO PREVIOUS PUZZLE



3/6/76

Dr. J. Daniel Palm's revolutionary plan for controlling all low blood sugar disorders—including overweight!

The first diet that makes you happier while it makes you thinner!

If you've failed to lose even with diets "that work for everybody"... and especially if you've helplessly watched yourself "drop out" of weight-loss clubs and programs... Dr. J. Daniel Palm has good news for you. For the first time, medical and nutritional research has developed a diet that solves both the physical problem of weight reduction and the psychological problem of will power!

Dr. Palm's book is based on documented new research into the common problem of low blood sugar, or hypoglycemia, which, in the words of one medical specialist, "can be the sole cause for irritability, tension, temper outbursts, and insomnia." Because temporary low blood sugar not only makes you irritable but also almost compels you to eat (or drink) too much, most traditional diets are doomed to fail even before they start—no matter how sensible or prudent they sound! The Fructose Diet utilizes a better natural sugar (now available for the first time in an inexpensive, easy-to-use form) to keep you healthier and happier while you successfully lose weight.

That "spoonful of sugar" —a key to stress

If you've ever tried to lose weight under a doctor's care, your physician probably warned you not to cut out all carbohydrates. Some sugar is vital to your health. But he may not have told you that ordinary sugar stimulates our body's production of insulin—and it can actually set up the dangerous stress response cycle that not only affects your temper and your mood, but also your heart, your cholesterol count, and your whole cardiovascular system. If you don't regulate your blood sugar level naturally by what you eat (and many low-calorie dieters just can't), your body regulates it for you by producing more and more adrenalin—which means more and more stress, irritability, and middle-of-the-night insomnia!

The secret is not to go on a sugar-free diet (endangering your health and missing many of your favorite foods), but instead to substitute fructose, the safe and natural fruit sugar. Dr. Palm shows exactly how in his new diet plan, sample menus, and easy, tested recipes.

Why the Fructose Diet is different

Sometimes Dr. Palm has been asked, "If fructose is a natural sugar, with the same calories as other sugars, how can it help me lose weight—and diet away my tensions and stress too?" As Dr. Palm explains, first of all, fructose is sweeter than ordinary sugar. You use less fructose (and therefore fewer calories) to get the same real sweet taste. And second, fructose has a far different effect on your body. Unlike ordinary sugar, it goes into your blood stream slowly, without triggering production of insulin. Hundreds of skeptical people have proved it for themselves, losing weight, gaining energy—and shedding their sleeplessness, "nerves," and tense, upset feelings along with unwanted pounds.

Why not cut out even more calories by using only artificial sweeteners and sugar substitutes? The fact is, the Fructose Diet not only tastes better than a sugar-free diet; it's also better for you. Artificial sweeteners may fool your mouth—but not your body. They do nothing about solving your low blood sugar problem—or the symptoms of insomnia, irritability and headache dieters often experience. And they do nothing about satisfying your body so you have the strength to stay on your diet.

In DIET AWAY YOUR STRESS, TENSION, & ANXIETY you'll learn

■ how the right amount of fructose protects you from hypoglycemia, obesity, alcoholism, and stress-related illness;

■ how to create your own personalized no-stress diet;

■ how to live comfortably with fructose weight-loss and maintenance plans for the rest of your longer, healthier life!

Here also are delicious recipes; shopping advice; tips on using fructose in your own favorite dishes; lists of foods that are naturally rich in fructose; complete instructions on planning the right amount of fructose for your own best diet; and answers to specific questions:

Do you get "carried away" when you sit down for a meal after a hard day's work? Dr. Palm suggests the simple pre-dinner "fructose snack" that can save your will-power.

You're not a candy-eater? Dr. Palm explains how to get your fructose quota in beverages, salad dressings, vegetables, relishes and other foods.

Afraid of the calories in fructose? Dr. Palm does the work for you — with high-protein, low-carbohydrate menus that figure every bit of your health-giving fructose into the right calorie count.

Is fructose important after you lose weight? Dr. Palm explains how fructose always continues to help you keep energy level high, decrease pre-menstrual cramps, avoid headaches and insomnia, increase sexual vitality, and handle emotional upsets.

Diabetes-in-the-family history? Dr. Palm explains the new use of fructose in the management of diabetes—and shows how it may be a crucial factor in preventing the onset of diabetes in adults.

Remember, only Dr. Palm's diet gives you all the real benefits of sugar without its dangerous disadvantages—and without slowing down your weight loss. And it's the first diet that attacks the carbohydrate metabolism problem most overweight people share! That's why it's not just a natural common-sense diet, but a revolutionary better sense diet. Try it and see — with our money-back guarantee.

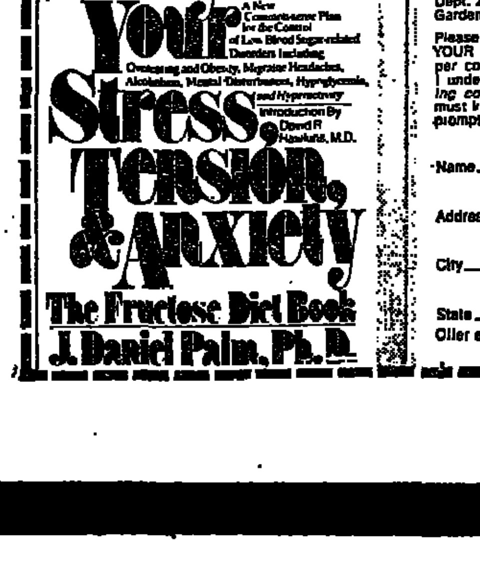
BEHIND "THE FRUCTOSE MIRACLE"

Fructose is not a drug, not a non-food supplement, not a fad. It's a natural fruit sugar, which you can eat in food and with food.

✱ Professional athletes have known about fructose for years; have you ever seen a fat track-and-field star?

✱ Officials at recent Olympic Games encourage the use of fructose because it gives, not a quick surge, but a long-lasting boost of energy.

✱ European film stars and jet-setters discovered fructose—using inexpensive fructose pills to keep themselves model-slim. And now the "miracle" of fructose can work for everyone — with Dr. Palm's easy-to-live-with diet plan, and with new, inexpensive, readily available fructose products that you can use to fill your sugar bowl, satisfy your body, and diet away your stress.



RECOMMENDED BY A PHYSICIAN WHO SPECIALIZES IN NEURO-PSYCHIATRIC AND METABOLISM PROBLEMS:

"A sizeable percentage of patients respond dramatically to elimination of ordinary sugar from their diet . . . This book is an important work in that it demonstrates a practical means for the alleviation of enormous amounts of human suffering."

Pilotless Train

All the tortuous efforts to restore New York City to solvency will come unhinged unless the wage line is held in the crucial negotiations now limping along for a new contract covering the city's subway and bus employees.

The pattern of 1976-78 wages and fringe benefits for police, fire and most other unionized municipal services will almost certainly be determined by these talks, conducted under the club of a possible April 1 strike. Yet the semi-autonomous Metropolitan Transportation Authority is still without clear guidelines from Governor Carey, Mayor Beame or the Emergency Financial Control Board on what kind of contract it can sign.

The lack of such guidelines can prove disastrous. The gravity of the city's fiscal crisis and the impossibility of raising the 50-cent fare without wrecking the stricken metropolitan economy plainly rule out any immediate possibility of putting more money into the pockets of transit employees or into liberalized fringe benefits. But that is only half the problem.

The Transport Workers Union, which got all of its 8 percent increase for 1974 and its 6 percent for 1975 before the pay freeze went into effect last July, recognizes that any increases negotiated now will be frozen. But it argues that the M.T.A. should negotiate higher rates on the same basis as any private employer, even if its members have to wait to get their extra cash.

This is a suicidal theory in terms of the city ever getting back into condition to meet its bills on a pay-as-you-go basis. It is one Governor Carey has rejected in new contracts for state employees. The pattern-setting pact just negotiated covering 3,300 state troopers provides for no increase in salary rates or fringes.

For the city to embark on a policy of deferred increases —on top of those to which it is already committed under the existing freeze of old contracts—would be to saddle itself with a higher base for pension computation and a higher jumping-off point for future wage agreements. There is no argument in either fiscal responsibility or equity to justify piling up liabilities of this kind when the city is, even now, so desperately short of assets—immediate or prospective.

Unlike most other groups in the municipal civil service, the transit employees not only received all of their past wage guarantees but an additional 22 cents in two semi-annual cost-of-living adjustments, an area in which they pioneered under the expiring contract.

The responsibility for drawing the line in the subway talks rests not with the M.T.A. or with the three-member fact-finding panel appointed under the Taylor Law but with the arbiters of the city's financial future—the Governor, the Mayor and the control board. It is time for them to get out the padlock.

Whose Primary?

The New York Democratic primary has almost nothing to do with democracy and almost everything to do with the retention of power by the party's political bosses in this state—because of the most complicated, undemocratic and expensive primary rules imaginable.

None of the names of the actual Presidential candidates will appear on the ballot for the April 6 primary because, in the absence of any legal requirement that the names be listed, the Board of Elections has decided that it cannot list them.

Thus, in lieu of Presidential candidates' names, voters in each of the state's 39 Congressional districts will be presented with slates, some of which will be committed to certain candidates and some of which will be uncommitted. But not every candidate will be represented by a slate in every Congressional district because (a) 1,250 valid signatures of registered Democrats are required in each district to have a slate listed in that district; (b) that is an extraordinarily expensive effort (the Udall campaign, for example, estimates that it spent $20,000 to get slates listed in just 23 districts), and (c) signatures are highly vulnerable to technical challenge.

Consider the problems of mounting midwinter petition drives manned principally by amateurs to collect the requisite signatures. Carelessly collected signatures are valueless. If, for example, a person has signed her name on the registration book "Jane A. Roe," but has signed the petition "Jane Roe" or has signed more than one petition, even in good faith, her signature may be stricken. Thus, a candidate who files with less than double the number of required signatures in a district is likely to find his slate off the ballot if an all-out challenge contest breaks out.

But that is just the tactic which state leaders of the Jackson campaign are using in a highly organized attack on the petitions of other candidates. Under the twisted logic of the New York Election Law, their effort is perfectly legal and a great temptation.

This system makes even less sense than the foolish waste involved in having two primaries for the state. Taken as a whole, it is a system that is indefensible. Unless, of course, you are one of the clubhouse bosses and want the smallest turnout and the greatest confusion in order to retain power. Then it is made to order. But it is still not democratic.

Rights of Spring

With only a few days to go before the first scheduled exhibition game and little more than a month before opening day, winter's hot-stove league has been extended and spring training has not yet started for professional baseball in North America. Most of the sliders and double-plays are taking place in hotel rooms where the player representatives and the club owners are trying to interpret for the umpteenth time the meaning of the "reserve clause" that binds players to teams forever and a day. Until a compromise is worked out, the club managements have padlocked the ballfields.

A few months ago, an arbitrator ruled that there could be realistic limitations on the venerable clause in player contracts, and a Federal judge upheld the ruling, which said that players could be free agents after playing one contract year and one option year. While hoping to get this ruling reversed, the owners have proposed to stretch the binding clause to nine years—half a lifetime in a player's perishable arms, legs and wind.

In a new era of jumped franchises, broadcasting rights and superstar salaries, it is hard to root for the home team anymore. It may be sold down or across the river, together with the players; that almost happened a second time to the San Francisco (ex-New York) Giants in the past few days. Since the "national pastime" has long outgrown its knickers and is into big business, the rights of the players should be equated with those of the clubs. Let a hundred contracts blossom, a hundred schools of baseball strategy contend.

Still Too Few Jobs

The number of people with jobs in this country has climbed back to its pre-recession peak of 86.3 million. That is welcome evidence of recovery from the worst economic slump in nearly four decades. But the sharp growth in the labor force in the last year and a half means that the army of job-seekers is still above seven million, an intolerably high figure.

The brightening national employment picture masks pockets of double-digit unemployment in such key industrial states as New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts and Michigan. In New York City the latest statistics are particularly gloomy. They show the idle total—recorded at 12.2 percent for January—as still going up in the face of the national downturn in joblessness.

Countercyclical revenue sharing and special public-service employment programs, accented toward teenagers, are badly needed to help New York and other distressed areas. That need is sharpened by indications in the overall national figures that blacks and other minorities are lagging behind whites in the recovery. Their unemployment total rose last month while the white total inched down.

A Victory for Guns

A subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee brought a tepid little gun-control compromise to the full committee and learned a lesson it should have known all along: that the gun lobby will scream as loudly at "craftily" designed half-way bills as it will at gun-control legislation with teeth.

The subcommittee presented legislation which would have banned about 71 percent of the guns now in circulation, but which still had plenty of loopholes. The gun lobby roared, activated its constituency and gleefully pointed out the loopholes. The committee blanched, reversed itself and, in a move that probably signals the end of any rational expectation of gun-control legislation during this election year, recommitted its ragged little effort to the subcommittee.

The chief lobbyist for the National Rifle Association exulted that the motion was a "great victory for constitutional rights." It would be more accurate to say that it was a great victory for the continuance of the mayhem that handguns do in this society.

Another Mandate?

The Palestine Liberation Organization leader, Yasir Arafat, is reportedly interested in the possibility of a United Nations trusteeship over the Jordan West Bank and Gaza Strip, pending an ultimate political settlement for the Palestinians of the two Israeli-occupied areas. The notion might well be dismissed by neutral observers as a mere trial balloon—or, by Israeli partisans, as a Trojan horse—or, by some Arabs, even as a red herring. But, whatever the metaphor, it is at least a fresh element in a diplomatic morass, out of which some possibly useful discussions might emerge.

The trusteeship idea is not new. For years past it has been the preferred option of many West Bank notables who hoped thereby to avoid the uncomfortable choice of allegiance to the P.L.O. or to their former ruler, King Hussein of Jordan. What is new is any support for the idea from within the P.L.O. leadership.

If Mr. Arafat is indeed taking this proposal seriously, he will probably have as much trouble selling it to the more extreme factions of his own fragmented organization as the Arab side would have in making it acceptable to the Israelis. Official Palestinian spokesmen in Beirut have already denied that any such temporizing formula has become P.L.O. policy.

At the same time, it would be an error for Israeli leaders to reject the notion out of hand, whatever their well-founded misgivings about an authority as unreliable as the United Nations. It is conceivable that an interim United Nations administration might provide the opening for King Hussein to regain a voice in the West Bank future—a responsibility which was summarily taken from him, and assigned to the P.L.O., by the 1974 Arab summit conference in Rabat.

Belatedly, Israelis now recognize their error in failing to promote a negotiation with Jordan before the Rabat meeting injected the less tractable P.L.O. into the diplomatic picture. That opportunity which seemed lost might be nudged into life again; there are even signs that leading Arab governments—including, most significantly, Syria—are reconsidering the Rabat decision and are no longer averse to King Hussein's reassertion of his old West Bank claims.

Israel has asked the United States to sound out the Arab governments on further steps that might be taken to soften the longstanding state of belligerency in the Middle East. No idea should be excluded from creative consideration.

Letters to the Editor

About Drinking in the Streets

To the Editor:

As reported in The Times, the City Council passed a bill on Feb. 24 that would make it an offense to drink alcoholic beverages on the city streets. The bill passed by a 2-to-1 margin. A violator would receive a summons and if convicted could receive a maximum punishment of a $10 fine and ten days in prison. Mayor Beame has yet to sign the bill.

Ironically, a new state law went into effect on Jan. 1 decriminalizing public intoxication and providing for police referral of publicly intoxicated persons to either their homes or to emergency receiving stations. The City Council bill would seem to be at odds with this new state law and to return the burden of enforcing a statute regulating drinking behavior and the commission of a victimless crime to the police and the judicial system. Moreover, these two laws taken together would say that public drunkenness is not a crime whereas public drinking is a punishable offense.

One outstanding example of a more appropriate police role in the community is the program established in December 1973 by the City Police Department's Twentieth Precinct (59th to 86th Street) in cooperation with the Manhattan Bowery Project. A police-civilian rescue team picks up publicly intoxicated people on a voluntary basis. The rescue team delivers these people to two local hospitals for in-patient detoxification. The team also offers other assistance, such as helping persons off the malls to safety or to their homes, and puts a stop to harassment of passers-by. There have been over 1,000 admissions to hospitals and 2,000 people have been given other assistance. This pilot program has been eminently successful and has found favor with prospective patients and community groups as well as with health-care providers and the police.

The Bowery disaffiliated alcoholic population would suffer measurably under the provisions of this bill. These homeless people customarily drink in public on the street in groups of two or more. They would doubtlessly find themselves in violation of this bill and be subjected to an all-too-familiar punitive arrest procedure. Presently, these intoxicated men are picked up by rescue teams and admitted to the Manhattan Bowery Project, which offers medical and rehabilitation services to alcoholism's most severely afflicted population.

To the Editor:

While it is admirable that advertisers should donate time and money to promoting a better picture of the Big Apple, the City Council seems determined to concentrate on its worms. Was there ever a more preposterous issue to be divided over than the bill to keep drunks off the streets?

It is bad enough that there are too few police to take care of the situation, but to be told that such a bill is unfair to certain ethnic groups defies belief. Those who create disturbances, hurl obscenities at passers-by or just roll in the gutter have all the rights while those who try to do their job, bring up their children in peace and preserve their neighborhood from being trashed—like everything else in New York — have no rights at all, only the inestimable privilege of paying taxes to support eyesores and nincompoops. Isn't there any Christian charity left for "just folks"?

Wronged Americans

To the Editor:

One of the most significant symbolic events of the entire Bicentennial has recently occurred with little notice from the press. On Feb. 19, the 34th anniversary of Franklin Roosevelt's Executive Order 9066, which authorized the procedure whereby more than 110,000 Japanese-Americans were incarcerated in concentration camps, President Ford issued Proclamation 4417. In it, for the first time, an American President specifically acknowledged that the evacuation was wrong:

"We now know what we should have known then—not only was that evacuation wrong, but Japanese-Americans were and are loyal Americans," the President said. He closed his proclamation with the resolve "that this kind of action shall never again be repeated."

All Americans concerned with freedom should applaud the President's action. At the same time we should all be aware that the experience of the evacuation remains a loaded gun in the hands of the executive branch; no proclamation can wipe out the decisions of the Supreme Court in the infamous Japanese-American cases which ratified the evacuation.

Nor should we forget that for 22 years—from 1950 to 1972—the same procedure, aimed not at a racial group but at "persons who there is reasonable ground to believe probably will commit or conspire to commit espionage or sabotage," was on the statute books in the "Emergency Detention Act of 1950."

Although it is axiomatic that only eternal vigilance can preserve liberty, it would be well if the Congress were to follow up President Ford's excellent proclamation with a legislative endeavor to effect the same end: the prevention of mass arrest and detention without either indictment or trial of any group of Americans, either ethnic or ideological.

Unique John Jay College

To the Editor:

In all discussion of restructuring the City University, a point which is being overlooked is that the closing of John Jay College of Criminal Justice effectively closes out education for undergraduate criminal-justice personnel in the city. John Jay has adapted its schedule to accommodate law-enforcement officers (police, corrections, fire) and their changing hours of work by offering the same class both day and evening. No other institution provides this opportunity.

Where are all the liberals who last season were screaming about the need for a more-educated police force?

Murder Unpunished

To the Editor:

By what perverse interpretation of "the interests of justice" is it fair to drop pending indictments from the Attica massacre of 1971? Thirty-nine people—29 inmates and 10 guards—were killed by the State Police. One police officer was indicted, along with 62 inmates who were charged with 1,200 offenses. The result of dropping the indictments is to permit wanton murder to go unpunished. This step is taken in "the interests of justice." Whose justice?

Productive Conservation

To the Editor:

There have been claims that environmental protection is not socially or economically productive. This is utter nonsense. People can neither produce nor enjoy the rewards of their production in an environment which poisons and sickens them. What good is a job to a person if it means ill health, lengthy hospital stays, forced retirement and premature death? These are issues for Governor Carey to ponder which will last well beyond his term of office.

Because of its mixed Iberian, African and Amerindian heritage, Brazil has often acted as mediator and interpreter between the United States and the Spanish-speaking republics and would like to do so between Washington and the African countries. It is in an especially good position to do this in Angola, whose colonial history was long tied to that of Brazil—and, further, Brazil recognized the Luanda government of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola in November when Portugal pulled out.

Brazil is determined to become the principal non-African influence in Portuguese-speaking Mozambique, Angola and Guinea-Bissau. Brazilian policy makers have decided that their country's common linguistic and cultural heritage with the Africans will help promote Brazilian economic interests, among others, in Africa.

Brazil wants Angolan oil and would like to cooperate in the marketing of tropical products, and it wants to obtain a major share of Portuguese-speaking Africa's consumer market.

To oppose Brazil on Angola would be to oppose its most basic foreign objectives. How much better to establish a mechanism for discussion that will minimize the adverse effects of the United States' having bet on the losing side in the Angolan civil war.

On the face of it, Mr. Kissinger's agreement appears to be another example of Washington's supporting an authoritarian military dictatorship. However, we should understand that the Brazilian armed forces are not monolithic: there are officers who oppose brutality and torture.

The President, Gen. Ernesto Geisel, represents the more liberal wing of the officer corps, which wants to reduce military involvement in day-to-day politics (albeit preserving some veto or moderating power) by either returning the Presidency to civilians or increasing the role of Congress, or both.

American policy makers are wise to recognize that the Brazilian political situation is slowly changing for the better. Sadly, arbitrary arrests, torture and deaths have taken place, but President Geisel has those responsible on the defensive. His removal of Gen. Ednardo D'Avila Mello, in whose São Paulo command two recent torture-related deaths occurred, is more symptomatic of the trend of events than the deaths themselves.

Lending prestige to the Geisel administration at this juncture, coming so soon after his successful reassertion of Presidential authority in São Paulo and weathering right-wing criticism for recognizing the government in Luanda, will serve to strengthen the positive drift toward a more open, more civilian government.

If Brazil can ease itself out from under military rule with the clear approval of Washington, it will provide a powerful example to the Chileans, who have come to believe that Washington only supports Pinochet-type dictatorships. The message will be especially understood by those Chilean officers who, embarrassed at the mindless brutality of Gen. Augusto Pinochet and his henchmen, are ready to depose the general and open the way to a more reasonable and humane civilian Government.

Though it may raise some false hopes, this mechanism more likely will serve to stem Brazil's drift toward Europe and its willingness to sell its United Nations votes for Arab oil—it supported the United Nations resolution linking Zionism and racism. United States international atomic policies forced Brazil to buy reactors from West Germany, resulting in considerable ill will and encouraging the Brazilian scientific community to look to German universities for guidance. France is pressing for a broad-ranging agreement and in May President Geisel goes to Britain where another accord is in the works. Developments will likely show that Mr. Kissinger acted in the nick of time.

How could planning principles withstand the pressures, and in the detailing and in the day-to-day solution of problems how could a general vision of the city be preserved? These were the basic questions at a recent meeting of the committee, in Jerusalem.

What we found is most encouraging to report. The planning of Jerusalem has indeed been turned about, and the overall goals for the future have been formulated as organizing principles.

● To impose a coherent form upon the city's future growth, a green belt is being established around the urbanized area itself, and a necklace of parks and landscaped areas, designed for active use, has been interspersed around the walls of the Old City. Accomplishing these open-space objectives involves both considerable public expense and the ingenious use of donations from landowners.

● Heights have been scaled down on many proposed developments. On the whole, the bowl-shaped contour and human scale of the city promises to be preserved, although here and there building proceeds at a scale criticized by some experts. Laws of private property and development rights have meant, however, a continuous struggle between the expectations of individual developers and the new planning goals and needs of society.

● Eleven hundred buildings have been registered for special protection, to insure the preservation of monuments and historic districts. The Aksa Mosque is being restored by the Moslem community, whose craftsmen are demonstrating that medieval skills are not totally lost.

● The city's unique architectural heritage is not only being preserved but actively enhanced. Diggings continue, under the supervision of distinguished archeologists. Of special note is an archeological park that will enable the 20th-century visitor to experience historical buildings, districts and ways of life.

● Planning and development activities under way recognize that Jerusalem after all is not a monument or a sterile museum but the vibrant and cosmopolitan capital of a modern nation. The central business district is being restored and new territory set aside for commercial facilities. Industrial-development plans emphasize job creation in electronics, pharmaceuticals and medical technology to supplement the employment base furnished by the Government.

● The lessons of our model-cities and poverty programs have been carefully distilled by the Jerusalem administrators. One result is the creation of planning districts for different economic, ethnic and religious groups, as well as the setting up of smaller decentralized city halls where local needs and desires can be expressed in the details of planning.

While the present redirection of the city's planning is encouraging, certain developmental issues still require more careful attention: retention of the vitality of the diverse cultural groups; accommodating the automobile, already the ruin of some of the world's greatest cities; harnessing of the forces of industrial development and mobility and migration; the specific means used to set priorities for capital expenditures.

However, beneath the committee's deliberations is a question of far larger import—the fate of the entire city and the nation of which it is a part. Most communities planning their future do not face such a question.

Given Israel's precarious position, a sense of uncertainty and danger necessarily intruded, at least subconsciously, into the meeting of the Jerusalem Committee.

In this light, the plan assumes a heroic stature by addressing the long-range and more pressing needs of Jerusalem's citizenry (for housing, jobs, green spaces) as if the nation's larger fate were not at stake.

After all, Jerusalem is an international center in which competing forces—political, social and religious—are at work, a city that has resonance far beyond its own borders and Israel's. Jerusalem's fate, depending on the larger world picture, is not at this time absolutely clear. Obviously, the national leadership proceeds as if things will work out well, and everyone hopes they will. This hidden concern gave the committee's entire proceedings a special poignancy.

News item: The House of Representatives is about to launch a $350,000 investigation to find out who leaked the Pike Committee's report on abuses in the Central Intelligence Agency.

CONGRESS telephoned. It was furious. "I've got to have $350,000 right away," it said. Grandmother could tell from my face that it was bad news. "It's just Congress, Grandmother. Nothing to worry about."

"Has it been locked up again?" she asked.

"Are you in jail?" I asked Congress.

"I don't have time for questions," said Congress. "If you love me, come across with 350 K right away."

"It wants $350,000," I told Grandmother.

"Pshaw," said Grandmother. "Let me talk to that Congress." She picked up the extension phone. "What in tarnation are you up to now, Congress?" asked Grandmother.

"Gee, Grandma," said Congress, "I've just got to have a new investigation."

Then Grandmother really gave Congress what-for. Hadn't we just bought it a brand new investigation last year? That C.I.A. investigation?

"That investigation wasn't comfortable," Congress said, "and besides it leaked all the time."

"What kind of investigation are you thinking of buying now?" she asked.

"This is the latest model, Grandma," Congress told her. "The new investigation will investigate to find out who leaked the findings of the old investigation to the newspapers."

Grandmother hit the ceiling. "You mean to tell me you want to spend $350,000 to find out who passed a few papers to the scribes?"

"They were secret papers, Grandma," said Congress.

"Secret papers, my foot!" said Grandmother. "I read 'em all in the newspapers and they were just the usual stuff about Henry Kissinger fibbing his way around the world and the C.I.A. sticking its nose into other peoples' business. Call that secret?"

"You don't understand, Grandma. It was the only secret we had. The President and Kissinger have warehouses full of secrets, and we've got none. As soon as we get a secret of our own, some fink leaks it. With our new investigation, we'll find out who's spilling the beans."

Grandmother's harsh tone softened as she heard Congress's plaintive story. She had always had a soft spot in her heart for Congress.

"There, there," she said. "Old Gramps isn't going to send her Congress away empty-handed."

"You're really swell, Grandma."

"But $350,000 seems a little pricey to find out who slipped some papers to the newspaper boys. I'll tell you what I'm going to do."

While Congress listened, Grandmother said she was going to put Congress in touch with a man named Spade. Sam Spade.

"It'll only take Sam two or three days—four at the most—to find out something as simple as that," she said, "and he'll work for $25 a day and expenses. The whole job shouldn't cost you more than $150."

There was a long pause at Congress's end of the telephone. "Gosh, Grandma," Congress finally said, "we'd look cheap if we bought a $150 investigation."

Grandmother's face creased in a loving smile. "Bless you, Congress. Old Gramps doesn't want her Congress looking like a pauper. Tell you what I'm going to do."

While Congress listened, Grandmother said she was going to put Congress in touch with an investigative newspaper reporter. "It'll probably take him three or four weeks to find out who turned over the papers, because those fellows drink a lot," she said. "But he'll soak you three or four thousand dollars for the job. Those buzzards make as much as $36,000 a year now for less investigating than Sam Spade does for $25 a day."

Congress spoke in a wheedle. "Grandma," it said, "you ought to see this new investigation. It comes with twenty outside consultants. It will take 1,100 man days of investigation and 1,000 hours of legal work."

Grandmother did some fast calculating. "Thunderation!" she cried. "That's like having one detective and one lawyer work for four solid years. And just to find out who passed the papers to the press? I'll bet Sam Spade and Perry Mason working together could crack the case in an afternoon."

"But this has class, Grandma," said Congress. "Twenty consultants, 2,100 detective-and-legal hours! Come on, Grandma!"

Grandmother could never say no to Congress. It was her favorite wastrel. "Of course you'll get the money," she said.

"Gosh, Grandma, thanks!" cried Congress. "And just for that we'll raise your Medicare taxes this year."

"Doesn't that Congress make you feel good all over?" she asked.

Giscard: II – European

By C. L. Sulzberger

PARIS

FRANCE makes no secret of the fact that it is seriously concerned about a growing appearance of paralysis in United States foreign policy, as recently displayed in Africa and even Europe. This is not a matter of conflict between Paris and Washington, only of preoccupation here.

Certainly in the Elysée Palace, there is reluctance to discuss this delicate subject. Yet the mere fact that its existence is known not only to diplomats but also to leaders of other European states, above all West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, who reviewed it last month in a meeting with President Giscard d'Estaing, makes the matter moot.

Even Mr. Giscard d'Estaing is said by his friends to feel it is wrong for Washington to advertise so openly its inability—for reasons of internal political debate—to react to threats abroad. At the highest level this is considered very serious. It should not be forgotten that the French Government, since de Gaulle, has consistently endorsed strong executive authority, which it now finds lacking across the Atlantic.

While France feels that its own policy during the Angolan crisis was logical and ultimately led Paris to take an initiative in recognizing the Popular Movement's Government once it had clearly won, the French point out there was little chance of an alternative because of U.S. flabbiness.

Had the United States given explicit indication that it would counterbalance any external intrusion in the contested area—like that of Cuban troops and Soviet equipment; or had it threatened to break off key negotiations with Moscow unless a halt was called, it is felt the result might have been less immutable. The course of Russian intervention could have been changed. But the necessary opposition never occurred.

This is a realistic nation and it would seem that Giscard has decided on two basic courses of action. To start with, he appears to feel that the European Community must make a greater defensive effort because of the apparent irresolution and political weakness of its superpower partner.

There are only two countries in West Europe that can seriously attempt this, France and Germany. Britain is again reducing its military budget. The other allies can make scant additional effort. Therefore, both Paris and Bonn agree to step up defense, with the West Germans working directly within the NATO setup, the French continuing tangentially.

Giscard apparently feels France should concentrate on two aspects of the problem. The small nuclear deterrent force should not be allowed to remain static but should be subjected to continuing technological improvement. And, over the next five years, France's conventional forces must be reorganized and strengthened.

It is often felt that General de Gaulle believed France should always work for international equilibrium and that while the United States was militarily much stronger than the Soviet Union, it was sensible to give Moscow more sympathy and support than might normally have been expected.

The Giscardien theory is complex. It insists that foreigners tend too often to analyze French policy in terms of past appearances. Each Paris Government pursues its own calculations. Anyway, it is clear today that Paris is less concerned with a precise world balance than a search for détente and the means of avoiding East-West confrontation.

One may add to this analysis that Giscard is not as convinced as some others that the world strategic balance has been upset. Rather than a military "reversal," perhaps there is only creation of overall equality, he feels; but that alone, meaning an end to previous U.S. advantages, makes it necessary for Europe to increase its effort. France never opted out of the Atlantic alliance although it did quit NATO's integrated "organization."

The greatest concern here now is not over the degree of shift in relative armed strength but in the political weakness of the West, both the United States and the European Community. America's paralysis is seen as political; Europe's as structural.

Paris can only hope the U.S. debilitation will be corrected after this year's Presidential election. But for Europe the Giscardien solution seems to be basic reform. This envisions initial creation of a de facto "directorate" of France, Germany and Britain to get things moving.

Then, ultimately, a formal directorate could be negotiated once a method has been worked out to convince the lesser E.E.C. nations. They must first realize they aren't going to be ignored and that their full participation is needed. In all events, a new sense of guidance and leadership is rendered urgent in this changing world.

His doctor said that "unless something unforeseen happens, I think the baby is on the road to recovery now."

Hearst was a willing participant in the bank roberry for which she is on trial or participated in it only "in fear of immediate death or great bodily injury" from her kidnappers.

Dr. Fort was asked his opinion, as an expert, and he even answered one question negatively, before Mr. Bailey managed to block the line of questioning. Judge Carter said he will study the objections and rule on them Monday.

The legal issue is whether the expert witness, expressing his opinion based on studies of the case including interviews of some 15 hours with Miss Hearst, can tell the jury that he believes Miss Hearst was a willing participant in the robbery.

This lacked the explosive quality of the exchange when Mr. Bailey accused Dr. Fort of trying to "fix" the case.

Mr. Bailey raised the question whether Dr. Fort had tried to "fix" the case through Randolph A. and Catherine Hearst, the defendant's parents, who were seated on a front bench.

When Mr. Bailey's voice suddenly rose to a near shout as he asked his question about trying "to fix this case," United States Attorney James L. Browning Jr., the prosecutor, challenged him to prove it, and Mr. Bailey, the witness, and Judge Carter had this exchange:

Q. Did you go to Mr. and Hearst an dtry to arrange a meeting with Jim Browning without my knowledge and without my prosence to dispose of this case?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. Did you have a conversation—

THE COURT. Mr. Bailey, just slow down.

MR. BAILEY: Very well, your honor.

THE COURT: The tone of the language and the tempo.

Dr. Fort conceded that he had suggested to Mr. and Mrs. Hearst that they contact their family friend, William Cobientz, a leading lawyer here who also serves as a regent of the University of California with Mrs. Hearst.

Says Inquiries Made

The idea was to make inquiries to see the bank robbery charges against Miiss Hearst could be settled without a public trial, Dr. Fort said.

"Did you advise them to do that without telling me?" Mr. Bailey asked.

"Absolutely not," Dr. Fort insisted, his own voice rising. "You and I had discussed it. I had told you and Mr. Johnson and Mr. Browning and Mr. Bancroft that I was going to raise this and it was done with the full knowledge of all four of you and, in fact, you praised me for doing so and my motives for doing so.

Albert Johnson is a defense co-counsel and David Bancroft is an assistant prosecutor. Mr. Coblenz served as an intermediary in behalf of the Hearsts after their daughter was abducted Feb. 4, 1974, by the self-style Symbionese Liberation Army, a terrorist group.

Led to Charges of Lying

It was conflict over whether Dr. Fort had told Mr. Bailey of his plans that led the two to call each other liars.

Mr. Bailey had previously challenged an article in The New York Times, appearing as the trial opened, that quoted several sources as saying that Miss Hearst's parents had tried to use influence to have the charges dropped or somehow to ameliorate her legal situation. Mr. Bailey said at the time that no such thing had happened.

In early tape recordings released by her captors, Miss Hearst said she had been told by her captors that they equated her with Russell Little and James Remiro, two Symbionese members then facing trial for murder, and would treat her as they were treated. Mr. Hearst announced that Mr. Coblentz had been hired by him to monitor treatment of the two S.L.A. members.

When reached by telephone after the statements in court, Mr. Coblenz said that in early January Mrs. Hearst had called, telling him she did so at Dr. Fort's suggestion. He said that Mrs. Hearst had asked him to speak to Mr. Browning and to ask to have Miss Hearst's trial delayed by taking it off the court calendar on the ground that to hold it would be dangerous to Miss Hearst's health, that her daughter's condition would be worsened.

'I Told Her No'

"I told her absolutely not," Mr. Coblentz said. "I told her it would be absolutely wrong and could be counterproductive."

Mrs. Hearst, at a court recess, said that Dr. Fort had told her that her daughter would receive no more than a six months suspended sentence on a guilty plea.

Mr. Bailey asked if Dr. Fort had not told the Hearsts "Bailey likes to try cases and Browning wants to be a Federal judge." Dr. Fort said that his words had been considerably distorted.

"I said that often the needs of the defendant in any criminal case—and of their family and of society—get lost in terms of other motives that are sometimes a part of the background of attorneys on both sides," the witness said.

He subsequently said he knew Mr. Browning only slightly, had no knowledge of whether the prosecutor had judicial ambitions, and that he had spent more time talking about the Hearst case with Mr. Johnson and Mr. Bailey than with the prosecutors.

Fort Denies Charge

Mr. Bailey asked if Dr. Fort had told Mrs. Hearst that "the most her daughter would get was six months' probation" on a negotiated guilty plea. Dr. Fort denied it. He said that from his many appearances as a court witness sentencing was "a matter solely for a Federal judge to decide."

Dr. Fort said that Mr. Johnson had personally praised him "for the reasons I gave when I told you and him what I intended to do."

The conflict between Dr. Fort and Mr. Bailey served to emphasize that Dr. Fort was setting out to criticise the methods by which defense psychiatrists arrived at their judgment that Miss Hearst was telling the truth when she said she helped rob the bank because she was frightened.

Dr. Fort's direct testimony will continue Monday, after which Mr. Bailey's cross examination on the merits of that expert opinion will begin. Already, Mr. Bailey has pointed cut that Dr. Fort is not a psychiatrist, although he is a medical doctor and has had three years of psychiatric training.

Mr. Browning and Dr. Fort engaged in a colloquy that told the jury their position was that only once, in a telephone conversation, had they discussed the matter of Dr. Fort's intention to speak to the Hearsts and that Mr. Browning had never told Dr. Fort of any ambition to be a Federal judge.

Mr. Browning then led Dr. Fort through a series of questions plainly drawn to cast reflections on the defense psychiatrists who have said they accepted Miss Hearst's claim that she was "coercively persuaded" to help rob the bank because she feared her captors. The prosecution contended she was a convert to the S.L.A. and a willing participant in the robbery.

Earlier today, the jury was told that when Miss Hearst and William Harris were arrested separately last Sept. 18, each carried a list of pay telephone numbers encoded in letters of the alphabet in the same secret cipher.

The letters were those in the word "paintbrush," according to Ronald M. Furgerson, an agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, who is a specialist in breaking codes. He said the 10 letters of that word, were assigned in sequence to the digits 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 and 0, so that a grouping of letters on such a card could be translated into a telephone number.

He said that he had needed two weeks to crack the otherwise simple code because letters that do not appear in "paintbrush" and had no numerical equivalent in the code had been inserted into the encoded words to complicate deciphering.

Radicals living underground generally use pay phones for communication, the authorities say.

Cards Found in Purses

The cards were in the purses of Miss Hearst and her roommate at the time of their arrest, Wendy Yoshimura, in a flat at 625 Morse Street here, and in the wallet of Mr. Harris when he was arrested with his wife, Emily, on the street near their flat at 288 Precita Street.

The two women had a few numbers Mr. Harris did not have, the witness said.

Mr. Johnson, the defense lawyer, objected to the admission of the cards into evidence and to the allowing of the jury to hear Mr. Furgerson, asserting that this evidence bore no relevance to the bank robbery charge against her, which alleges that she helped rob the Sunset branch of the Hibernia Bank here on April 15, 1974.

"It's too remote in time, 19 months after the alleged crime," Mr. Johnson said.

Mr. Browning, the prosecutor, countered that the possession of the code cards, showing an attempt to shield a communication network of pay telephones, and the fact that Miss Hearst had the same numbers as Mr. Harris were important evidence to rebut her testimony.

'They Trusted Her'

"This shows they trusted her," the prosecutor said. "It refutes her story that she was frightened of Harris and [was] his puppet until her arrest."

Judge Carter ruled that the jury could see the cards and hear Mr. Furgerson. Then Mr. Johnson attempted to forestall that expert testimony by offering to agree that the facts were as Mr. Browning had stated them, but the prosecutor insisted on putting the agent on the witness stand.

The jury has spent most of the week waiting while the lawyers and judge argued about whether certain evidence could be admitted. The seven women and five men came back into court, looking puzzled and resentful, to hear Judge Carter say, "We are hopeful after your long recess is now at an end that we'll go forward with the evidence introduced by the Government."

Mr. Browning emphasized several times after the jury returned to court that Miss Hearst had claimed the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination when she had been asked as a witness about various of the handwritten documents. He did this as the defense sought to block the expert testimony of another F.B.I. agent, Bobby R. Gillham, for 14 years an examiner of questioned documents.

Mr. Gillham said the handwriting in question had been compared with samples given by Miss Hearst and had been identified by him as having been written by her.

Inspector Is Guilty Of Taking Bribes From Grain Dealer

Special to The New York Times

NEW ORLEANS, March 5—The former chief inspector for a grain elevator here pleaded guilty today to accepting bribes from a company whose export grain shipments he was supposed to supervise.

Louis H. C. Matherne headed operations for Delta Weighing and Inspection Bureau Inc., the private agency that last year, under pressure from the Agriculture Department, gave up its inspection duties at the Mississippi River Grain Elevator. Both Delta and the Italian-owned elevator company have been subjects of the continuing Federal investigation of corruption in the grain industry.

Five of Mr. Matherne's subordinates were convicted last year on related charges, but the United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit has ordered a new trial for one of the inspectors.

A Federal Bureau of Investigation agent testified before Federal Judge Fred J. Cassibry that Mr. Matherne obtained $6,500 in Christmas "bonus" payments in 1972 and 1973 from an executive of Tabor & Company, a Midwest grain concern that then used the elevator.

The agent said Mr. Matherne gave part of the money to inspectors he supervised, who were in charge of weighing and grading Tabor's grain.

The elevator manager, Giovanni Rametta, asked the Tabor executive to make the payments and the executive got clearance for the deal from his superiors, the agent testified.

Federal prosecutors are seeking to have Mr. Rametta held in contempt of court for going to Italy instead of answering a subpoena to appear before a grand jury investigating the payments.

Judge Cassibry deferred sentencing Mr. Matherne pending a report on him by probations officials.

7 of the Democratic Delegate Candidates: Why They Run

By FRANK LYNN

For the first time in many years, the New York Democratic Presidential primary will be a crucial part of the process of winnowing out Presidential hopefuls—a procedure that began in New Hampshire last week.

Five Democratic Presidential contenders are making major efforts in the April 6 primary to win substantial portions of the 274 delegates—9 percent of the nationwide total—that the state will send to the Democratic National Convention here in July.

The Democratic candidates—Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington; Jimmy Carter, former Georgia Governor; Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona; Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama, and former Senator Fred Harris of Oklahoma—have already mobilized hundeds of workers throughout the state, are prepared to spend thousands of dollars and have scheduled extensive campaigning in the state in the next month.

One candidate who had planned an extensive campaign, Senator Birch Bayh of Indiana, withdrew from the race Thursday, but his delegate slates remain. Some are likely to switch to Mr. Udall and others to an uncommitted status.

The New York Republican Presidential primary should be relatively quiet, with only a small number of Republican uncommitted delegate candidates challenged by supporters of Ronald Reagan. Vice President Rockefeller and his New York allies hope to control an uncommitted New York delegation—154 delegates—without a struggle.

None of the Presidential contenders' names will appear on the primary ballot. Instead, slates of delegates pledged to the candidates will service as their stand-ins.

Who are these Democratic delegate candidates? How were they picked? Why are they running?

Seven delegate candidates—a nun, a union official, a restaurant owner, a teacher, a college department chairman, a retired person and an editor—shared their experiences in a series of interviews. They were chosen for the interviews at random, although there was some effort to select delegate candidates from various areas and groups in the state.

Six are supporting various Presidential contenders, and the seventh is uncommitted. Their ages range from 23 to 66, but despite this wide range, and their political differences, they have much in common.

None has been a national convention delegate before, although one did attend the Democratic issues convention in late 1974. Most belong to political clubs and participated in other campaigns. None expects to spend much of his or her money in the primary campaign.

Most agreed that unemployment was the major issue in the Presidential campaign. Most lack the zeal and die-hard commitment of the George S. McGovern and Eugene McCarthy delegates in 1972 and 1968. Most could support any of the Democratic Presidential candidates except Governor Wallace. Most did not consider Governor Carey a likely candidate for either President or Vice President.

Most do not actively seek the delegate roles, but were selected because they are active political and community workers who could attract votes to a delegate slate.

One of the Bayh delegate candidates, Ennio (Chip) Morselli, who remains on the ballot in the Third Congressional District, which straddles the Nassau-Suffolk County line, was selected because he is a veteran Democratic county committeeman in the Huntington, L.I. area and because he is a full-time United Auto

But most Catholics awaited official sanction, which came with the introduction of the revised liturgy by the Congregation for Divine Worship in Rome on Feb. 6, 1974. In the interim the document has been translated into English, and priests, religious educators, nuns and lay people have been getting acquainted with the reforms.

The Rev. Thomas A. Krosnicki, a liturgist for the National Conference of Bishops, estimates that a fourth of the 156 dioceses in the United States will begin using the rites immediately and that others will put them into effect through the next year. As of the first Sunday of Lent next year, the new practices will be mandatory.

In this region the Archdiocese of New York and the Dioceses of Brooklyn, Bridgeport, Trenton and Newark have conducted vigorous drives to introduce the new forms. A slower pace is being adopted by the Dioceses of Patterson, Camden and Rockville Centre.

For many priests and lay people, the revisions call for shifts in attitude as well as in behavior, especially toward the meaning of sin. While the traditional rite, authorized in the year 1215 by the Fourth Lateran Council, stressed personal wrongdoing and accountability to God, liturgists point out that the new forms amplify the social aspects of sin.

The World Aspects

"The church is now saying that sin effects my relations not only with God but also with my brothers and with my world," said the Rev. Joseph M. Champlin, pastor of the Holy Family parish in Fulton, N. Y., and a noted liturgist. "Therefore I must be reconciled to other people and nature as well as with God. That means that things like pollution and ecology have definite moral overtones."

The word "reconciliation" is rapidly replacing "confession" because it is thought by the church to convey better the whole concept of penance and forgiveness.

Another expectation is that offering the face-to-face meeting with a priest will afford a deeper examination of one's conscience.

"External actions indicate inner reality," said the Rev. Joseph L. Cunningham of the Brooklyn diocese's liturgical commission. "If someone confesses that he is constantly picking on his children, we should ask why. If we can deal with this in an open way, I think we will find the sacrament better received.

"The role of the priest is more difficult. In a sense he has to respond to what the person is really saying."

Priests who were interviewed drew a sharp distinction between the more open, informal method penance and psychological counseling.

"It is not a place just to unload," said the Rev. Kenneth Jadoff of St. Thomas More parish in Manhattan. "It is still a sacrament for spiritual renewal."

However, the new forms clearly reflect the trend toward personalization in the post-Vatican II church and add liturgical richness to what some have considered an austere sacrament.

"The big difference," according to the Rev. Richard Groncki, liturgical officer for the Newark Diocese, "is the prayerful attitude engendered between priest and penitent. This was formerly the most ritually devoid of all the sacraments."

Participation in penance has declined sharply in the last decade. A National Opinion Research Center Study found that those going to confession at least once a month dropped from 38 percent to 17 percent between 1964 and 1974 and that those who "almost never" attended rose to 12 percent from 6 percent.

"Perhaps the decrease in the receipt of this sacrament in recent years is due to a forgetfulness of its value," Terence Cardinal Cooke said in a recent pastoral letter. He commended the new rite as a means of strengthening "our union with God and each other in love and Peace."

Bishop Walter Curtis of Bridgeport, head of the Catholic Bishops' liturgical commission, was more explicit. "It is my prayerful hope," he said, "that the new rite of penance will be the cause of a return to the sacrament."

The Major Events of the Day

International

The Soviet Minister of Agriculture, Dmitri S. Polyansky, was abruptly dropped from the governing Politburo apparently as punishment for the country's disastrous grain crop failure last year. His name was conspicuously absent from the list of newly elected Politburo members that Leonid I. Brezhnev read yesterday at the closing session of the 25th Communist Party Congress in Moscow. Two other party figures, Grigory V. Romanov and Dmitri F. Ustinov, were promoted to full members of the Politburo. Mr. Romanov, the Leningrad party chief, and Mr. Ustinov, head of the Soviet defense industry complex, were formerly alternate, or nonvoting members. [Page 1, Cols. 6-7.]

The British Government announced that it would continue the administration of Northern Ireland indefinitely following the failure of its efforts to politically reconcile the province's Roman Catholics and Protestants. Merlyn Rees, Britain's Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, told the House of Commons that the 78-seat Northern Ireland Convention, which was elected last May to work out a political reconciliation, would be dissolved at midnight and the British would run Ulster "for some time to come." [1:1.]

The British pound, once the pillar of the world's economy, fell below $2 for the first time. For the last six months the pound had been close to falling through the psychological barrier. It closed at $1.975 yesterday. Its value declined, it was said, because the Bank of England decided that Britain would be better off with a shrunken pound. [1:2-3.]

The United States proposed an international pact to combat corporate bribery and promised to eventually answer governments seeking the identities of officials bribed by the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation. But Deputy Secretary of State Robert S. Ingersoll said that the disclosure process would take time and that the Government would not tell Japan and the Netherlands which officials were involved in Lockheed bribery charges for at least six months. [1:4.]

National

The Labor Department said that the employment situation continued to improve in February. The national unemployment rate on a seasonally adjusted basis eased to 7.5 percent from 7.8 percent in January and total employment in February rose slightly to the July 1974 prerecession peak of 86.3 million. The number of unemployed as estimated by the Government's monthly sample survey of households was 7,136,000. This figure was also seasonally adjusted. President Ford, campaigning in Illinois, said the figures were "extremely encouraging." George Meany, president of the A.F.L.-C.I.O., said the "official figures seriously understate employment in America. [1:8.]

The cancer-death rate in the United States rose at a faster rate last year than in any year since 1945, according to the National Center for Health Statistics, which estimates that the 1974-75 increase will be between 2 and 3 percent, perhaps slightly above 3 percent. Not since 1950 has the increase in the cancer death rate been as high as 2 percent, and the rate has not been above 2 percent since 1945 when the increase over the previous year was 4 percent. Flu and Pneumonia Hit Epidemic Levels In All U.S. Regions

ATLANTA, March 5 (AP)—Deaths linked to influenza and pneumonia reached epidemic levels in every region of the nation last week for the first time this year, the Center for Disease Control reported today.

The center announced that 1,191 pneumonia or flu-related deaths were recorded in 121 major test cities across the nation for the week ending Feb. 28.

That is 656 deaths above the "expected number" calculated from studies of previous nonepidemic years, a spokesman for the center said. Using a complex formula, scientists for the center add a cushion factor of 50 to 60 to establish an "epidemic threshhold."

For the year, the spokesman said, the health agency has recorded 1,270 "excess deaths"—flu-related deaths above the expected number. This compares with some 12,700 "excess deaths" reported during the epidemic of Hong Kong flu in 1968-69.

New England, Middle Atlantic and Western states again led the rising statistics as epidemic levels continued for the fourth consecutive week in those areas.

Flu-related deaths exceeded the epidemic threshhold in the central and Middle Western states for the first time this year, the center's weekly report of statistics showed.

Data reviewed from 532 reporting institutions in 36 states showed "increased absenteeism in 30 percent of the schools and 29 percent of the industries, and increased emergency room visits in 43 percent of the hospitals," the report stated.

"Morbidity appeared to be highest in the New England and Middle Atlantic areas, where 60 percent of schools, 46 percent of industries and 43 percent of hospitals reported increases," it said.

The flu strain identified as A-Victoria remained responsible for virtually all confirmed cases.

A Declaration of Principle

August 19, 1896

When Adolph S. Ochs became publisher of The New York Times in 1896, he wrote what he called a "business announcement." It appeared on the Editorial Page over his signature. It read, in part:

"To undertake the management of The New-York Times, with its great history for right-doing ... is an extraordinary task. But if a sincere desire to conduct a high-standard newspaper, clean, dignified and trustworthy, requires honesty, watchfulness, earnestness, industry, and practical knowledge applied with common sense, I entertain the hope that I can succeed in maintaining the high estimate that thoughtful, pure-minded people have ever had of The New-York Times.

"It will be my earnest aim that The New-York Times give the news, all the news, in concise and attractive form, in language that is parliamentary in good society, and give it as early, if not earlier, than it can be learned through any other reliable medium; to give the news impartially, without fear or favor, regardless of party, sect or interests involved; to make the columns of The New-York Times a forum for the consideration of all questions of public importance, and to that end to invite intelligent discussion from all shades of opinion."

The world has changed since 1896. The New York Times has changed with it. But the principles that guided The Times in those days still guide the day-to-day coverage you expect from

Post Office Closings Permitted If Service Abides by the Rules

WASHINGTON, March 5 (UPI)—A Federal judge ruled today that the United States Postal Service had the right to shut down 600 rural post offices, provided it gave a 90-day notice and surveyed the effect on mail users.

Judge John Lewis Smith Jr. said that the service must comply with its own regulations on closings before it could eliminate money-losing post offices.

He granted temporary injunctions sought in two suits to keep the rural post offices operating. A trial date for a permanent injunction will be set later.

However, the ruling apparently allows the Postal Service to close post offices if it has met the notice and survey regulations.

One suit was filed by the National Association of Postmasters of the United States and the National League of Postmasters of the United States and the second by 51 members of Congress.

Law Held Violated

The suits, trying to stop the closing of 600 post offices, alleged "irreparable harm" because the post offices probably never would be reopened and charged the Postal Service with violating a Federal law against closing a post office "solely for operating at a deficit."

"The court finds little merit in plaintiffs' contentions," Judge Smith ruled. "These statutes do not mandate deficit operations in rural areas, nor do they preclude the U.S.P.S. from being fiscally responsible.

"The new U.S.P.S. regulations are an attempt to combine sound economics with quality service and at the same time a reasonable modification of rigid procedures in the old guidelines."

The judge said that the Postal Service could close facilities only after surveying persons to be affected, giving a 90-day notice and providing an "equivalent or improved level of postal service."

Judge Smith said that the service had violated the 90-day notice and survey regulations in at least some cases. "An agency, of course, m st comply with its own rules and regulations," he added.

The 1970 Postal Reorganization Act provision, which the plaintiffs argued was violated, says: "No small post office shall be closed solely for operating at a deficit, it being the specific intention of Congress that effective postal services be insured to residents of both urban and rural communities."

Bill Would Order Hearings

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 5—Senator Jennings Randolph, Democrat of West Virginia, introduced today a bill requiring the Postal Service to conduct public hearings before any closing or consolidation of postal facilities.

The measure would require a 60-day notice of hearings on closings and also would empower the President to appoint the Postmaster General and his deputy, with confirmation by the Senate. The Postmaster General at present is named by a board of governors appointed by the President.

The Postal Service said late today that it would "resume effective at 6:01 P.M. E.S.T. March 5, 1976, its program of closing or consolidating small post offices in strict accordance with its own regulations as ordered by Federal Court Judge Smith."

SUBWAY STATION SCORED AS UNSAFE

Mrs. Abzug Asks Overhaul at Broadway and 72d St.

Representative Bella S. Abzug and members of Community Planning Board 7 toured the 72d Street IRT subway station yesterday, pointing out allegedly unsafe conditions.

One problem cited was the speeding auto traffic that pedestrains encountered getting to the subway kiosk, which is on an island in the center of Broadway.

Members of the group also said that the steps leading down to the subway platforms and the platforms themselves were too narrow and that token purchasers were sometimes were forced to standin the street when lines became especially long.

"The city cannot afford to stop the construction project," the Representative said. "We understand that times are especially tough for the city, but we don't want the Mayor to give up altogether."

According to Transit Authority spokesmen, the station has been in operation since 1904 and was to undergo reconstruction under a $1,350,000 grant until the grant was terminated by the city's Bureau of the Budget last February.

Work Had Not Begun

Although no actual construction work was begun, the city had authorized extensive design work, which called for such changes as the removal of subway entrances and exits in the Broadway kiosk.

New exits and entrances were to have been constructed at 71st and 72d Streets. Both the uptown and downtown subway platforms would have been enlarged, and passageways to the platforms would have been built under the subway tracks.

"For 20 years the community fought for the work to begin," said Rita Aid, chairman of Board 7. "Now we will have to start a campaign to force the city into completing the job."

Both Miss Aid and Representative Abzug said the subway construction was also important because it would provide jobs for city residents.

"A substitute version of a bill recently vetoed would provide Federal funds for public works jobs," Mrs. Abzug said.

"The station is located in an intersection called Verdi Square," Mrs. Abzug said, "but the people who travel through it now have nothing to sing about."

Shakeup by Air Force Eliminates 2,610 Jobs

WASHINGTON, March 5 (UPI)—The Air Force has announced a tactical air control reorganization that will eliminate 1,020 active duty jobs, 1,534 Air National Guard positions and 56 civilian posts.

The units involved handle communications for fighter and attack planes in combat. The Air Force said it plans to break up larger tactical control groups into smaller tactical control flights.

The changes will cut the number of Air National Guard tactical groups from 6 to 3 and the number of tactical control squadrons from 24 to 11. The number of smaller tactical control flights will increase from 12 to 17.

The changes will mean that the Air National Guard unit at Roslyn, L.I., will get 18 new positions, while the Orange (Conn.) Air National Guard unit will lose 56 positions.

U.N. Group Urges U.S. Insure Safety Of Foreign Aides

By PAUL HOFMANN

Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., March 5—A United Nations committee, prompted by a recent shooting in the Soviet diplomatic residence in Riverdale, adopted a resolution today urging the United States to "insure the security" of foreign official missions and their personnel here.

The text noted that despite pleas for more safety by the General Assembly and other bodies of the world organization, "terrorist and other acts of violence, harassment and attacks are continually being committed against missions accredited" to the United Nations.

Today's resolution also stressed the need for "appropriate police protection," and called on American authorities "to prohibit unlawful activities of the organizations that organize, incite, encourage and engage in perpetration of terrorist or other acts of violence" against foreign missions.

Jewish Groups Mentioned

Delegates singled out the Jewish Defense League and other militant Jewish groups in the debate preceding agreement on the document.

About an hour after several shots were fired in the Soviet compound in Riverdale on Feb. 27, a woman who said she spoke for the Jewish Armed Resistance telephoned news organizations to say that the group was responsible for the attack. No one was hurt.

Today's resolution was adopted by consensus, without a vote, in the 15-nation Committee on Relations with the Host Country. The United States indicated acceptance of the text.

However, the United States representative, Albert W. Sherer Jr., pointed out that in a free society it was impossible to give "perfect, ironclad guarantees" for the security of foreign missions. "We shall do the best we possibly can," he promised.

Commenting on the American assurances, a United States official said that the Federal Bureau of Investigation would henceforth be called in to investigate all aleged occurrences of political harassment or violence involving diplomatic missions. The official said that up to now only major incidents had been brought to the attention of the F.B.I.

Angola Faction Announces Stepped-Up Guerrilla Drive

LUSAKA, Zambia, March 5 (Reuters)—Dr. Jonas Savimbi, leader of the National Union for the Total Liberation of Angola, has announced a stepped-up guerrilla campaign against Cuban and Government forces in Angola.

In a statement delivered in Lusaka today, Dr. Savimbi said that during the last 12 days his groups forces had killed at least 15 Cuban soldiers, captured six, destroyed or captured eight Cuban armored vehicles and shot down a plane of the governing Popular Moment for the Liberation of Angola.

Dr. Savimbi said that his group had enough military supplies, including anti-tank weapons, to last at least a year and had 13,000 troops regrouped in southern Angola. The National Union reverted to guerrilla warfare after it lost Huambo, its administrative capital, to Popular Movement forces on Feb. 9 in the last major conventional battle of the Angolan civil war.

EX-JUSTICE JONES OF CLAIMS COURT

New Deal Farm Expert Dies —Texan Served in House

AMARILLO, Tex., March 5 (AP)—Marvin Jones, former Chief Justice of the United States Court of Claims, former chairman of the House Agriculture Committee and an instrumental figure in much of the New Deal's farm legislation, died yesterday. He was 94 years old.

Champion of Farmers

After practicing law in Amarillo, Justice Jones was elected on the Democratic ticket to Congress from the 13th Texas District, which he served from 1917 to 1940.

A chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture in 1931, he promoted legislation to improve the farmers' lot and as "legislative father of the Agricultural Adjustment Act," he helped write the act and draft a substitute when the Supreme Court ruled the original version unconstitutional.

He backed President Roosevelt on the Sugar Bill and was one of the first to advocate extension of the food-stamp plan. Other bills he supported were the Soil Conservation Act, the Imports Act, the Farm Loan Act, the Ever-Normal Granary Bill and the Insured Mortgage Plan.

Justice Jones, on leave from the bench, in the first half of 1943 was assistant to James F. Byrnes, then Director of Economic Stabilization, and War Food Administrator from June 29, 1943, to July 1, 1945.

He was Chief Justice of the Court of Claims from 1947 until 1964, when he took semiactive status as a senior Federal judge. He retired from the Federal bench in 1971.

Justice Jones, who was born on a cotton farm near Valley View, Tex., worked his way through Northwestern University and graduated in 1905. He received his law degree from the University of Texas in 1907.

A loyal New Dealer, he was a trusted adviser of President Roosevelt and Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace.

In 1940 President Roosevelt appointed Mr. Jones a judge of the United States Court of Claims. While on leave from the bench in 1943 he served as chairman of the United States delegation to the United Nations Food Conference in Hot Springs, Va.

At the end of the conference, he declared: "We have set out to make a world in which, for the first time in history, every man, everywhere, will know certainly that he can get enough to eat."

In June 1943, he was named food administrator of the United States.

He concentrated on plans to stimulate the production of essential crops. In October 1943, President Roosevelt appointed him American representative to the Combined Food Board, the Anglo-American group charged with obtaining and distributing food for Britain and the United States. He also became chairman of an interdepartmental committee on food requirements and allocations to distribute supplies in the United States.

He was the author of "How War Food Saves American Lives."

Surviving are a brother, Herbert K. Jones of Lubbock, Tex., and a sister, Mrs. Jess Neeley of Amarillo.

Jim Walsh, Basketball Star, Led U.S. to Olympic Medal

SAN FRANCISCO, March 5 (UPI) — Jim Walsh, former Stanford star who was captain of the 1956 United States Olympic basketball team, which won the gold medal, died yesterday. He was 46 years old and had been hospitalized several weeks after having recently undergone two serious stomach operations.

Walsh starred for the Stanford basketball teams of the early 1950's, then went on to play for the Marine Corps and the Phillips 66 team of the old National Industrial Basketball League. He also played briefly for the Philadelphia Warriors of the National Basketball Association.

Walsh later coached in the National Industrial Basketball League and then worked in the San Francisco assessor's office.

He is survived by his wife and a brother.

Elevator Concern Accused In Explosion Fatal to Five

LANSING, Mich. March 5 (UPI)—The State Labor Department concluded today that a spark from a welding torch set off a grain elevator explosion that killed five workers in Milawukee and cited the elevator operator for three willful safety violations.

Labor Director Keith Molin said the state's investigation had "revealed that the welding operation was conducted in direct violation of the safety law."

Mr. Molin said that fines totaling $10,000 for each of the three violations would be assessed against the operator, the Michigan Elevator Exchange.

The department found that the welding operation had ignited airborne organic dust at the 12-story elevator last Jan. 22.

JACQUES MALINIAC, A PLASTIC SURGEON

Dr. Jacques W. Maliniac, a former plastic surgeon here, who was known for his research and writing on breast surgery, died yesterday in Englewood (N.J.) Hospital. He was 87 years old and lived in Miami.

Dr. Maliniac, who retired 10 years ago, was a founder and former president of the American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery and the Educational Foundation of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery. For the last five years he was a special adviser of the foundation.

He was the author of "Reconstructive Surgery of the Breast" and "Sculpture in the Living: Rebuilding the Face and Form by Plastic Surgery."

He received his medical degree from the University of Paris in 1914 and came to the United States after World War I. Dr. Maliniac had been a consulting plastic surgeon to Polyclinic and Sydenham Hospitals and clinical professor of reparative surgery at Polyclinic Medical School.

He was a diplomate of the American Boards of Plastic Surgery and of Ophthalmology and Otolaryngology.

His wife, Rose Jean, survives.

DR. DOROTHY K. NASH, NEUROSURGEON, DIES

Special to The New York Times

PITTSBURGH, March 5—Dr. Dorothy Klenke Nash, who is said to have been the only woman neurosurgeon in the United States from 1928 to 1960, died today at a nursing home. She was 77 years old.

Dr. Nash was senior surgeon and head of the Department of Neurologic Surgery at St. Margaret Memorial Hospital and a member of the staffs of West Penn and Children's Hospitals. She was also an instructor in neurosurgery at the University of Pittsburgh.

She graduated from Miss Spence's School in New York in 1917, from Bryn Mawr College in 1921 and received her M.D. degree from Columbia University's College of Physicians and Suregons in 1925. She became a resident of the New York Neurological Institute in 1926 and later was on the staffs of Bellevue Hospital, the New York Neurological Institute and Lawrence Hospital in Bronxville, N.Y. She moved here in 1936.

Dr. Nash is survived by a son, a daughter, a sister, a brother and eight grandchildren.

Adm. Herbert Knowles, 81, Early Submarine Leader

Special to The New York Times

ELIOT, Me., March 5—Rear Adm. Herbert B. Knowles, a retired Naval officer in both World Wars and a pioneer submarine commander, died Wednesday at the Maine Medical Center in Portland. He was 81 years old.

He was born in North Newburgh, Me., and was graduated from the United States Naval Academy in 1917. In World War I, he served on the battleship Arkansas and in the submarine service. He commanded several submarines in World War II, participating in a dozen campaigns in the Pacific.

He received five awards of the Legion of Merit. Later the Admiral taught submarine electricity in the Navy's submarine school at New London, Conn.

He leaves his widow, Mrs. Helen K. Knowles; a daughter, a brother and two sisters.

Leopold Balleisen, Engineer, Industrial-Relations Expert

Leopold L. Balleisen, a civil engineer and industrial-relations consultant here for more than half a century, died Wednesday in a hospital in Louisville, Ky. He was 80 years old and lived in Louisville.

As vice president of the Kramer Construction Company, Mr. Balleisen supervised construction of a number of large Manhattan buildings, including the Westbury and Edison hotels and the original McCutcheons Building.

In the 1930's, as the first industrial secretary of the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, he lobbied to aid and spur growth of manufacturing in his native borough. He later operated a consulting company in Manhattan, specializing in labor-management relations. He was a graduate of the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute.

Surviving are two sons, Robert and Donald; a sister, Ethel; five grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren.

WILLIAM D. CRANE

William D. Crane, founder and former headmaster of the Crane County Day School in Santa Barbara, Calif., died Thursday in Debray Bech, Fla. He was 84 years old and lived in Southport, Conn.

Mr. Crane graduated from Harvard in 1916 and served with the American Field Service and the 42d Division in France during World War I. He also served with the American Field Service during World War II.

Survivors include his wife, the former Margaret McCargo Meyer; two sons, Peter and George; a stepson, Edward B. Meyer, and a sister, Katharine Montgomery.

Archbishop Bartoletti Dies

ROME, March 5 (UPI)—Msgr. Enrico Bartoletti, secretary general of the Italian Catholic Bishops' conference and former Archbishop of Lucca, died today of a heart ailment. He was 59 years old.

PROF. HARRY HOIJER, ANTHROPOLOGIST, 71

Harry Hoijer, professor emeritus of anthropology at the University of California in Los Angeles, died Thursday in a Santa Monica hospital after a long illness. He was 71 years old and lived in the suburb of Brentwood.

An authority on American Indian linguistics, particularly of tribes in the Southwest, he compiled "A Navajo Lexicon," published in 1974. With Ralph L. Beals, Dr. Hoijer wrote "An Introduction to Anthropology," first issued in 1953. He also wrote or edited several other books and was the author of more than 50 articles and reviews in professional journals.

Dr. Hoijer taught at the University of California branch for 30 years before he retired in 1970. He was chairman of the department of anthropology and sociology from 1948 to 1951. Previously, he had been an instructor of anthropology for nine years at the University of Chicago, where he had received B.A., M.A. and Ph.D. degrees.

He was a former president of the American Anthropological Association and the Linguistic Society of America.

Surviving are his wife, the former Dorothy Jared; a son, Peter; two daughters, Charlotte Teeples and Susan Loraine, and a sister, Mrs. Joseph Johnson.

Arkansas Rights Figure Dies

Lothaire Scott Green, a retired teacher whose son Ernest was the first black graduate of Central High School in Little Rock, Ark., died Wednesday at her home there. She died two days before her 77th birthday, but last Monday 750 people, including national civil-rights leaders, honored her at a prebirthday party in New Orleans.

Deaths

ALTCHEK—M. Richard, M.D. Death extinguishes a beautiful flame with the passing of our good friend, whose proudest possession was his silver button signifying his position as an Honorary Member of the New York Turf Writers Association. General Douglas MacArthur once said, "only those fit to live are not afraid to die," a phrase that best describes our departed member who was a veritable mother hen to denizens of the Press Box. He not only cared for our medical needs but also was our father confessor. He knew well that his dreaded leukemia would take him away soon but he never wavered along the way as he went through the stretch run smiling and spreading cheer. We have lost a great man.

3 Injured in Explosion On Wards Island Tower

By ROBERT E. TOMASSON

An explosion ripped through the walls of a water tower atop a 19-story psychiatric hospital on Wards Island yesterday morning, critically injuring a workman and sending chunks of brick and mortar the size of footballs through the ceiling of the infirmary. The debris narrowly missed 18 patients.

"It ranks as a miracle the way that stuff came through and hit no one," said Norman Salshutz, administrative director of the Charles B. Dunlap Psychiatric Center, part of the state's Manhattan Psychiatric Center.

The explosion, just before 9:30 A.M., also sent chunks of debris through the ceiling of the staff dining room, less than half an hour after breakfast was served. The dining room and infirmary are on the top floor of the tan-brick building and just under the water tanks on the roof.

The hospitals 353 patients were transferred to the Adolf Meyer Psychiatric Center next door, where unused wards were opened. The state-run center has three hospitals with 1,300 patients as well as a children's psychiatric center and a facility for the retarded.

The explosion, which rained bricks and mortar over parked cars around the hospital, was attributed by the police to spray paint fumes that ignited as three workmen painted the inside of the blockhouse that housed two giant water tanks.

Dovor Gobin, 28 years old, whose address was not immediately available, was treated by doctors at Dunlap before being transferred to the burn unit at Harlem Hospital, where he was listed in critical but stable condition with burns over half his body, mainly on the head and upper body.

The two other workmen, whose names were not immediately disclosed, were treated for superficial injuries and released.

The three workmen, employed by a private contractor, were on the last day of a two-month job in which they had repainted the interiors of the water towers at the three hospitals.

Yesterday afternoon, repair work had started and Mr. Salshutz, the hospital administrator, said he expected the patients to be moved back on Monday.

At 100, Legal Aid Strives to Live Within Budget

By TOM GOLDSTEIN

Founded 100 years ago by merchants who hired one part-time lawyer to give free legal advice to "worthy" German immigrants, the Legal Aid Society has emerged as a central force in the city's criminal-justice system.

With a budget this fiscal year of $25 million and a staff of 634 lawyers, Legal Aid, which provides free legal assistance to poor persons in both criminal and civil matters, is now the largest law office in the city and the second largest in the country—surpassed only by the United States Department of Justice.

"Legal Aid has become an essential and integral part of the system," said District Attorney Mario Merola of the Bronx. "Without it, the criminal-justice system would crumble."

But for the 1975-76 fiscal year, the criminal division received $2 million less from the city than it said it needed. The division has lost 30 lawyers in the last year, and 50 lawyers who left after their salaries had been frozen have been replaced with lawyers with little or no experience.

The criminal division gets almost all of its funds from the fiscally straitened city.

"We are losing the equivalent of our residents and attendant physicians and replacing them with the equivalent of new interns," said William J. Gallagher, who supervises the 430 lawyers on the criminal staff. "It takes less-experienced lawyers longer to try cases, and that causes congestion."

Legal Aid's appeals bureau, which has also been affected, now has a backlog of 1,500 cases, some dating back 18 months. William E. Hellerstein, who heads the appeals bureau, said he would need to increase his staff from 75 to 100 to eliminiate the backlog.

And every day the civil division, which is financed primarily from private contributions, has to turn away 75 to 100 poor people faced with matrimonial, landlord-tenant, welfare and Medicaid problems.

"We just can't service as many clients as we did before," said Archibald R. Murray, attorney in chief and executive director of the legal group.

"Tens of thousands of matrimonials could pass through our doors," said Kalman Finkel, the head of the civil division. "Our big push is to have recognized the right of a free lawyer to a person seeking a divorce."

Last year, the State Court of Appeals refused to grant that right, and Legal Aid now is pressing its case in Federal court.

For this year, Robert B. McKay, the president of the society, has set as his priority the raising of a $7.5 million endowment to keep staffing at the civil division at its present levels.

A ceremony marking the society's centennial will be held Monday night at the New York State Theater at Lincoln Center. Justice Harry A. Blackmun of the United States Supreme Court will be the main speaker.

Legal Aid was the first group in the country to provide legal assistance to the poor, but in its early years, its guiding ideology seemed to be aimed as much at preserving the social order as at helping the poor.

In the 1890's, Legal Aid's annual report noted:

"It keeps the poor satisfied. Communism and socialism have, it seems, lost their grip upon our New York population since our society has done its effective work on behalf of the poor."

At its 25th anniversary dinner, Vice Presidnt Theodore Roosevelt described Legal Aid as a necessary safeguard against "chaos" and "violent revolution."

By its 75th year, the emphasis of Legal Aid had shifted, and Judge Learned Hand of the United States Court of Appeals criticized lawyers for having failed to help "the little people."

At that time, Legal Aid was still a minor force in the city's justice system, and its 1951 budget was $300,000. Even then, its directors met at downtown clubs that prohibited blacks, Jews and women, and it made news not for its court victories, but for its social activities.

The period of leisurely growth ended in 1963, when the United States Supreme Court handed down Gideon v. Wainwright, the landmark decision that had the effect of requiring the city to provide funds for the adequate representation of poor people accused of serious crimes.

That year, 65 lawyers worked in the criminal division. By 1970, when riots spread through the city's jails, the number had grown to 171. The rioting inmates complained about inadequate representation by Legal Aid lawyers, who at one stage or another represent 75 percent of the defendants in the city's criminal courts.

After directors of Legal Aid threatened to cancel their contract unless the city provided more money, the city increased Legal Aid's budget dramatically, and the number of lawyers in the criminal division has nearly tripled since then.

Inmates also complained that they were represented by different lawyers during each stage of the criminal justice process. In 1971, a task force of lawyers and judges concluded:

"The heart of effective representation lies in establishing an attorney-client relationship in which the total responsibility for the outcome of a case lies with one attorney."

In the last year, in part as a result of prodding by the union of staff lawyers, who staged strikes in 1973 and 1974, Legal Aid has instituted a citywide system where the defense lawyers represent their clients from the start to finish of each case.

Murphy Decries President's Policy on Ocean Dumping

By DAVID BIRD

Representative John M. Murphy, Democrat of Staten Island, said yesterday at the end of a series of legislative hearings that the Ford Administration's handling of the Ocean Dumping Act "is a national disgrace."

Mr. Murphy, who is chairman of the Oceanography Subcommittee, said that contrary to the Congressional mandate to end such dumping of wastes from manufacturing processes and residue from sewage disposal plants, known as sludge, by 1981, the Federal Environmental Protection Agency was allowing even more dumping than before.

In 1974 the agency announced its intention to phase out by July of this year such activity in an area long used for dumping 12 miles off the New Jersey and Long Island shores.

Some scientists have said that the dumping there has created a vast 'dead sea' in the area and that there is a danger of the accumulated sludge eventually polluting the area's beaches.

But this week in the draft of an environmental impact statement the Federal agency concluded that the continued dumping would not have any additional effect on the site.

The report said that moving to a new site farther out to sea would not only be more expensive, because of added transportation costs, but would also contaminate what was now an unspoiled area.

At the hearings yesterday at 26 Federal Plaza, Gerald M. Hansler the regional administrator here, defended his organization's record in controlling ocean dumping but conceded that "I don't think we'll go to zero" by 1982.

'Licenses to Dump'

His testimony concentrated on showing that the number of permits for industries to dump wastes in the ocean had been sharply reduced. But under questioning he said that the volume of pollution had remained high because the agency had been able to do little with several large dumpers.

Mr. Murphy charged that the agency "has actually turned into a dispenser of 'licenses to dump.'"

While phasing out ocean dumping, the environmental agency was to develop alternative means of disposal that would not pollute the coastal waters.

Mr. Hansler held out little hope for alternative disposal methods. He said that pyrolysis —burning the sludge under high heat in a sealed chamber — was the most promising method, but that it could not be developed before 1985 and would cost at least a half-billion dollars.

Charles Samowitz, Commissioner of the city's Department of Water Resources, said the city and the state were in no financial shape to finance such a project even if the Federal government paid 75 percent of the cost.

Even moving the dumping farther out to sea would cost the city too much, doubling its annual bill for transportation to $7.1 million, Mr. Samowitz said.

Before making a firm decision on continuing the present dumping site at least through 1981, the Federal environment agency will hold a series of public hearings of its own in New York City, Toms River, N. J. and Mineola, L. I., beginning March 24.

In a statement at the close of yesterday's hearings Mr. Murphy said "the anti-ocean dumping program has been a flop, especially off the coast of New York."

A Recall Is Sought On Infant Pacifiers After Baby's Death

By JOSEPH F. SULLIVAN
Special to The New York Times

NEWARK, March 5—Federal and state consumer agencies were attempting today to recall more than 150,000 baby pacifiers of the type that caused the death by asphyxiation of a 5-month-old infant in the Bronx on Feb. 16.

The recall attempt involved telephone calls to scores of local shops and drugstores because the wholesalers of the pacifiers failed to keep complete records of the names of the stores selling the item, according to Virginia Long Annich, State Director of Consumer Affairs. The incomplete records had made earlier Federal recall efforts ineffective.

The pacifiers are marketed under the names Navy, Texas, Fauna and Flower Hermetic and are imported by La Cibeles Inc. of 538 38th Street, Union City, for distribution primarily through outlets in Spanish-speaking communities in seven states.

More than 50,000 of the pacifiers have been distributed in New Jersey and approximately 64,000 in New York. Smaller shipments have been sent to Massachusetts, Connecticut, Illinois, Maryland and Florida.

Imported From Spain

A total of 168,420 pacifiers were distributed, according to the United States Consumer Product Safety Commission, which is overseeing the recall.

Louis Ardois, investigator for the commission, said a Fauna brand pacifier was involved in the death of the Bronx infant. His investigation led him to the Union City importer. All the pacifiers in the recall were imported from Spain.

Mrs. Annich said that the Federal commission did not specify what might be wrong with the pacifiers, but that either a manufacturing defect or improper design of the pacifier was believed to have permitted the infant to swallow it.

"If anyone had any questions about baby pacifiers, we would like them to call our action line at (201)648-3537," Mrs. Annich said.

Police Aide Suspended After Arrest

A women employed as a Police Department administrative aid has been suspended from the force for failing to tell her commanding officer that she had been arrested three weeks ago on a charge of cheating on welfare payments. A police spokesman said that the aide, Yvonne Price, who had been assigned to clerical duties at the 10th Precinct, was arrested on Feb. 18 and accused of collecting $3,316 in welfare payments in the last year while employed by the department. She became a police administrative aide in August 1973.

Ex-Policeman Gets 5 Years in Tax Case

A retired police lieutenant, convicted in January on charges of income-tax evasion totaling more than $100,000, was sentenced to five years and a fine of $30,000. The former lieutenant, Pasquale Intrieri, had testified that he received money for two homes costing more than $100,000 and a $15,000 Mercedes Benz from "little tin boxes" left by relatives who had died. He plans to appeal the verdict.

Port Commissioner Sworn In

Louis F. Mastriani, a financial and management specialist, was sworn in by Mayor Beame as Commissioner of Ports and Terminals at an annual salary of $38,771. Mr. Mastriani succeeds Edgar C. Fabber, who resigned this year to return to private industry.

10 Flee Nursing-Home Fire

Ten residents of the Crestview Home for the Aged in Greenwich, Conn., were removed without injury Thursday night when a fire destroyed the building. Four were housed overnight at Greenwich Hospital, while the six others were taken in by the home's owner, Francis Roche, who lives next door. Fire Chief John Titsworth said the three-story 112-year-old Victorian frame structure was suitable now only for demolition.

Yonkers Hires Fiscal Advisers

Yonkers, facing its fifth default deadline in three months and no longer able to rely on state financial help, has followed the advice of Albany officials and is seeking professional assistance. The City Manager, Vincent Castaldo, said he had hired Smith, Barney, Harris, Upham & Company, financial advisers, and Hawkins, Delafield & Woods, bond counselors, to help raise $16.1 million by March 19 and to arrange for long-term financing for the city. Yonkers, meanwhile, has been meeting current payrolls and expenses by asking residents and companies to prepay taxes normally due in April.

5 L.I. Companies Get Job Grants

Governor Carey announced that five Long Island concerns would receive loans totaling $341,000 from the New York Job Development Authority to use in industrial growth projects. The concerns and the amounts they will receive are Nucraloy Corporation, Oceanside, $152,800; North Shore Graphic Arts, Greenvale, $39,000; Suffolk Apparel Company, Wyandanch, $47,200; Aul Instruments, Flushing, $45,300, and Eagle Control Corporation & Burr Controls, East Northport, $56,700. The loans are expected to create 84 jobs within a year.

Some of the businessmen in the area took their money and retired. Others, Mr. Mencken said, simply moved their operations to suburban communities, leaving jobless workers behind.

"Thirty persons were out of work when Modern Cabinets moved out of here," Mr. Mencken said. "In all the businesses, most of the employees are low-income persons and most are not highly skilled, but they are good workers and they almost always have dependents."

A woman who works in sales for Mr. Mencken has six children and a handicapped man, also at Marion Auto, has nine dependents. Mr. Mencken's wife is the only other full-time employee, he said, but all have worked at Marion for nearly 13 years.

Mr. Mencken took his complaint about relocation to court, he said, but was told by the judge that she "knew about the work of the Salvation Army and didn't need to know about mine."

"I told her my employees like me better than the Salvation Army, that my customers travel great distances because I'm fair and honest. I don't claim that I give things away, but my prices are competitive."

Representative Charles B. Rangel has written to Mayor Beame seeking his intervention, but no response has come, Mr. Mencken said. Yesterday, Mr. Mencken drafted a telegram to the Mayor.

A spokesman in the Mayor's office declined comment.

Ten persons will be employed in the Salvation Army social service center, Brigadier Niesiewicz said. The center will offer such services as drug and job counseling.

The New York Times

Martin Mencken owns an auto parts store that will be torn down to make room for a social service center. "The city is about to create a disaster," he said.

Gravediggers Union Threatens to Strike

The gravediggers union in the metropolitan area has threatened to strike 48 Catholic, Jewish and nonsectarian cemeteries at 7 A.M. Monday unless an agreement is reached on a new three-year contract.

Sam Cimaglia, president of Local 365, Cemetery and Green Attendants Union, last night announced the deadline for the walkout at cemeteries in the city, on Long Island and in Westchester County after a fruitless, seven-hour bargaining session at the Roosevelt Hotel. Negotiations are to resume tomrrow afternoon.

n Factory No. 3 in Peking. Textile manufacturers are urging government regulation of cotton imports.

The New York Times/Audrey Topping

ıports of Cotton From China Soar

ERBERT KOSHETZ

s of cotton textiles na have climbed sharp- ıe fourth quarter of inging cries of alarm United States textile recent speech, John president of the Textile Manufactu- titute, said that the must convince the epartment to "take ion on the diplomatic we are in trouble."

:tile market here faces ı, according to Mr. if the rate of imports na keeps growing as in 1975.

In 1974, the United States imported 84.6 million square yards of cotton goods, either in cloth or apparel. Last year, the figure jumped to 139.2 million square yards, a gain of 64 percent, and China is now second only to Hong Kong as a source of textile imports into the United States.

Agreement Urged

"Now is the time for the United States Government to negotiate a textile agreement with China," Robert C. Forney, vice president and general manager of the textile fibers department of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company said recently.

The United States textile industry, he said, could be overwhelmed by a flood of imports if China put its resources into a major selling campaign. He pointed out that China must earn foreign exchange to pay for the capital goods and technology it sought from the West. Like most developing nations, it would probably use textiles as a primary export, because production facilities can be expanded quickly and textile products are easily marketed in the West, he added.

If China were granted most-favored-nation status, according to Mr. Forney, it would probably concentrate such sales effort on the United States market.

"We have seen the beginnings of this kind of program," Mr. Forney said, "in the increased export of cotton goods by the People's Republic. We are also aware that large quantities of manmade fiber are being purchased, some of which are undoubtedly for export in the form of fabric or apparel."

The situation has become complicated in that some of this country's largest textile manufacturers and distributors, some of whom are members of the institute, are the principal importers of cotton goods from China.

These importers point out, however, that price is not the primary consideration. They say that the quality of the goods attracts them, and that the Chinese live up to their commitments.

Max Levinson, who heads the foreign division of M. Lowenstein & Sons Inc., said his company was importing 15 million to 20 million yards a year of cotton goods from China.

"We find that the quality is superb," he said, "and this is the result of the labor-oriented textile industry in China. A mill there employs three times as many people as an American mill does, and they work slower and more carefully."

More Examiners

Fifty persons examine the output of a weaving room, needling out defects, he added, and equipment, old by American standards, is well maintained. The Chinese were said to have four times as many loom fixers as Americans employ.

"The result is," Mr. Levinson added, "that carded goods there are as good as our combed goods."

Carded goods are generally made of shorter-length cotton fibers, while combed goods are those of longer, more fully processed cotton yarn.

The Chinese grading system for cotton goods provides for as few as 20 defects for each 100 yards of first-quality fabric, compared with 40 defects in American mills for the same amount of cloth. The majority of the goods can be used for dyeing plain shades of fabric, in which defects show up readily. Importers, it was pointed out, get a premium for plain shades as contrasted with goods that have an over-all printed pattern.

"The Chinese are very reliable when it comes to delivery," Mr. Levinson said. "The only difficulty is that they will not permit American ships to pick up the goods, and this often necessitates transshipment from Hong Kong or Japanese ports."

ARCO HAS BEGUN TALKS WITH PETRO

Weighs Sale of a Subsidiary to Canadian Company for $400 Million

The Atlantic Richfield Company announced yesterday that it had entered discussions with Petro Canada, a wholly owned Canadian Government company, contemplating the sale of Atlantic Richfield's wholly owned subsidiary, Atlantic Richfield Canada Ltd. for a price of about $400 million. The price, it was said, is based on Arco's reserve evaluations and is subject to certain adjustments. Petro-Canada has a 90-day period to review and verify the data furnished on the properties and other assets held by Atlantic Richfield Canada and to carry out an independent appraisal.

Merger News

In Los Angeles, Robert O. Anderson, Atlantic Richfield chairman, said the prospective sale would permit the company to employ the capital in a number of domestic investment opportunities.

Atlantic Richfield Canada produces 23,000 net barrels of crude oil and 65 million net cubic feet of natural gas daily. It has extensive holdings of undeveloped land in Canada including acreage in the Athabasca tar sands.

3 Railroads Prepared To Buy Green Bay Assets

Three railroads announced yesterday that they were prepared to buy the assets of the Green Bay & Western Railroad, which serves central Wisconsin, for $4 million in cash plus an offer to assume all of Green Bay's liabilities amounting to $21 million.

The roads making the offer are the Chicago Milwaukee St. Paul and Pacific Railroad, the Chicago and North Western Transportation Company and the Soo line Railroad.

The offer, it was said, was an attempt to stave off a purchase proposal made in October of 1974 by the Burlington Northern. In December, the three roads had offered to acquire and operate portions of Green Bay & Western.

Value of the Pound Drops Below $2 for First Time

a result of factors beyond Britain's direct control. Rumors have been rife in Europe for weeks that another troubled currency, the French franc, could be devalued at any moment. If so, a chain reaction would rumble through many other currencies, forcing them to realign with the franc.

Today's fall is not expected here to lead to a prolonged run on the pound or to the dramatic economic disruptions in international economic relationships that can follow overnight devaluations.

The pound has been slipping from the $2.40 range for nearly a year, during which institutions affected by such shifts have been able to make orderly adjustments.

Over that period, some British exports have been becoming relatively cheaper than those of countries with stronger currencies, and those countries' products have been getting more costly here.

One result the British Government expects is a rise in tourism to Britain. Despite inflation in prices here, the country is becoming a relative bargain for tourists from West Germany and Switzerland, particularly, whose currencies are among the world's strongest, and to a slightly lesser extent for American tourists.

The timing of the pound's fall below the $2 level surprised just about everyone who deals in currencies here. It came after the Bank of England cut its lending rate to 9 percent from 9.5 percent.

The pound started out yesterday worth $2.0245, precariously close to $2 but a level where the pound had seemed locked for months. At that level, it had already shown enough strength in recent weeks to resist the kind of adverse news that can deflate a currency—such as new reports on the balance-of-payments deficit and on the lag in the country's recovery from the recession.

Trading in Currency

Traders thought that the Bank of England may have been buying pounds yesterday and early today to offset the selling and that it finally backed away.

"The only buyer seems to have been the Old Lady," said one trader, "but she probably saw people wanting to sell four times as much as she was prepared to buy, so she gave up." He was referring to the Bank of England, commonly known as the Old Lady of Threadneedle Street.

Traders and economists here are convinced, in any case, that the bank has not been trying to prevent a fall to $2. The bank, they said, is only trying to assure an orderly decline. "They obviously didn't object to it going to $2," said another trader.

Currency experts here were unusually hard put to identify the sellers of the pound. They rarely know for certain because buy and sell instructions come from banks that act confidentially for customers.

Sometimes the dealers—primarily banks and brokers—can discern the source of such activity because it originates in certain parts of the world or with banks known to have a preponderance of a single group of customers, such as the leading oil companies.

This time, however, the selling was widespread, suggesting that hundreds of multinational companies, which amass huge holdings of various currencies through the sale of their goods and services, became wary of getting caught with the losses that would result from a decline of the pound.

Dollar Eases Abroad

LONDON, March 5 (UPI)—The dollar followed a downward trend today that completely wiped out the previous day's sharp gains. It rose only in France and Italy.

Gold rose more than $1 on the day. In Zurich it was up from $132.37 to $133.87, and in London from $132.75 to $134.00.

Canada Raising Bank Rate

OTTAWA, March 5 (Reuters)—The Bank of Canada announced today the bank rate would be raised to 9½ percent from 9 percent effective Monday.

STOCKS END WEEK ON UPWARD NOTE

Prices Gain in Light Volume on Labor Dept.'s Report of Economic Recovery

DOW CLIMBS BY 2.28

Analyst Sees Present Rate of Consolidation in the Market as 'Logical'

By DOUGLAS W. CRAY

Stock prices closed out the first week of March with a modest gain yesterday in comparatively light turnover as the list appeared to extend its current consolidation period following the large advance registered in January and February.

Early in the day the Labor Department reported fresh evidence of a quickening in the pace of the economic recovery. The nation's jobless rate dropped to 7.6 percent in February from 7.8 percent in January.

This report may have helped get the market off to a positive start, with the Dow Jones industrial average up 6.30 points at 976.94 at 10:30 A.M. The initial price advance failed to hold, however, and the average turned lower by 1.58 points at 1 o'clock.

stocks on the New York Stock Exchange began a gradual afternoon pickup with the Dow Jones industrial average closing at 972.92, up 2.28 points on the day.

On balance, the list closed with little net change on the day. Of the 1,852 issues traded on the Big Board, 736 closed higher, 709 were lower and 408 were unchanged. A total of 53 issues on the New York Exchange moved up to new 1975-1976 highs and four were down to new 1975-1976 lows.

Volume on the exchange was 23.03 million shares, down from 24.41 million traded on Thursday and below the trading pace of January and February. Institutional activity waned, as reflected in the trading of 155 blocks of 10,000 or more shares each, compared with a revised total of 177 that were traded on Thursday.

Overall price changes were mostly fractional, a further reflection, it was suggested, of the consolidative nature of the stock market at this point. The most actively traded issue was Litton Industries, which closed at 16, down ⅛, on a turnover of 477,700 shares. The stock was also actively traded on Thursday.

Cyanamid Role Cited

By CLARE M. RECKERT

The American Cyanamid Company was added yesterday to the list of six drug producers that have been involved in illegal or irregular payments abroad.

The large chemical producer, whose pharmaceuticals are made under the Lederle Laboratories name, said that investigation disclosed payments made by or on behalf of subsidiaries in four foreign countries. The payments approximated $1.2 million over the five years, 1971-1975, it said.

An official declined to identify the countries or to add to the company's announcement.

The company said it had initiated a program last year to modify its internal audit practices and to increase the awareness of its managers in the matter of illegal and irregular payments. No illegal or irregular payments within the United States have come to the attention of the management, the company said.

The payments were considered by the officers and directors of the company, "none of whom had been previously been aware of them," the company said, adding that after their discovery, the matter was discussed with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The company said it would file appropriate reports with

2 BROKERS FOUND GUILTY OF FRAUD

Scheme Is Said to Include Some Illegal Payoffs Disguised as Charity

By ARNOLD LUBASCH

Two stockbrokers, Edwin Mendlinger and Stanley Snyder, have been convicted of conspiracy and stock fraud in a scheme that included illegal payoffs disguised as payments to charitable institutions.

The two men, who operated the stock brokerage company of Mendlinger, Snyder Inc., at 50 Broadway, were found guilty Thursday night in Federal District Court here at the end of a four-week trial. They could face up to five years in prison for conspiracy and two years for fraud. Judge Charles M. Metzner is scheduled to sentence them on April 15.

Another defendant, Barrett R. Kobrin, who was a registered representative in Maplewood, N.J., was also convicted of stock fraud. The fourth defendant in the trial, Bernard H. Grindlinger, who was a registered representative in York, Pa., was acquitted.

Indicted Last Year

Mr. Mendlinger, who is 40 years old, lives at 160 East 65th Street. Mr. Snyder, whose original name was Schildinger, is 40 and lives at 45 East 89th Street. They were indicted last year on charges of paying $133,000 to brokers and others to manipulate the price of a stock.

According to Steven A. Schatten and Constance Cushman, who prosecuted the case, the evidence at the trial showed that Mr. Mendlinger and Mr. Snyder had fraudulently raised the stock price of the Belair Financial Corporation of Beverly Hills, Calif. The corporation provided billing and bookkeeping services for doctors and dentists.

Secret Payments

The Government charged that Mr. Mendlinger and Mr. Snyder made secret payments to Stuart Schiffman and Akiyoshi Yamada, two convicted stock swindlers, for dealing in the Belair stock. Mr. Schiffman, who headed another brokerage company, pleaded guilty before the Mendlinger-Snyder trial. Mr. Yamada, who went to prison for previous cases, managed a mutual fund that bought $600,000 of Belair stock.

As a device to disguise payoffs, the Mendlinger-Snyder firm allegedly issued $100,000 in checks to several Jewish charitable institutions in Brooklyn. The checks were listed as payments for advertising in religious journals.

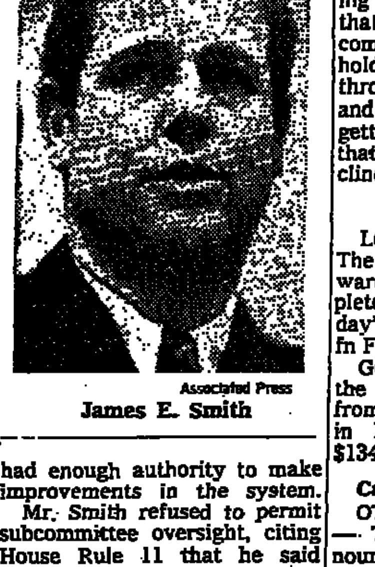
The prosecutor said that persons purportedly acting on behalf of the charitable institutions kept 10 percent of the $100,000 and turned over the remaining $90,000 to participants in the stock-fraud conspiracy. This money was allegedly used for payoffs.

Comptroller Bars a Study Of Office by House Panel

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 5—The Comptroller of the Currency, James E. Smith, rejected late today a proposal that would permit a House subcommittee to supervise a detailed study of the effectiveness of his office in the examination of national banks.

Mr. Smith, in agreeing that such a study was desirable, argued that the House could not guarantee to preserve the privacy of banks and their customers. He added, however, that he had asked the General Accounting Office to oversee his inquiry.



Associated Press

James E. Smith

Benjamin S. Rosenthal, the Queens Democrat who heads the House Commerce Subcommittee, last month called for a study to determine whether examination reports were accurate enough to be of value in forecasting how big bank losses would be during economic downturns, whether recommendations were acted upon and whether the Comptroller had enough authority to make improvements in the system.

Mr. Smith refused to permit subcommittee oversight, citing House Rule 11 that he said makes information provided to any committee available to the House as a whole.

$218.9 Million Loss Is Listed by Pennsy

The Penn Central Transportation Company reported yesterday that despite a narrowing of its December loss from a year before, the country's largest railroad lost a record of $218.9 million in 1975, up from $178.2 million in 1974.

In December, the company, which declared bankruptcy in June of 1970, lost $24.8 million, compared with a deficit of $31.1 million during the same 1974 month. However, the improvement was illusory since Federal infusions of cash were responsible for the improvement.

The Penn Central attributed the loss to slumping traffic—carloadings during the year record low. Moreover, the statement by the trustees of the carrier maintained that rate

A.&P. Begins Retraining All Its Employees

By ISADORE BARMASH

From stem to stern, from top to bottom, from upper management to the checkout counter, the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company is being retrained. The vast program, involving all of the 85,000 employees in the company's 2,200 stores, is aimed at turning around the company, which two years ago surrendered its No. 1 position to the Safeway Stores Corporation, of Oakland, Calif.

"I want to turn you on to our company," says a smiling Jonathan L. Scott, A. & P.'s chairman and chief executive officer, in a television tape program for the company's employees.

"The store's success lies in the people," adds Grant C. Gentry, president of A. & P. "If we don't satisfy the customer . . . "admonishes Robert F. Longacre, vice chairman, trailing off meaningfully.

The three top executives of the giant supermarket chain delivered these comments on television cassettes, which have already been seen by 53,000 A. & P. employees. The five-minute segments will eventually be viewed on video cassette screens by all employees.

The taped pep talks to be followed by similar ones and presentations on merchandising, display, sales promotion and other subjects, are part of A. & P.'s "Face-to-Face Communication Network," which will provide a continuing channel of information from corporate offices to the field staff.

The message network is a major element in A. & P.'s first formal training program in a quarter century, though "retraining" is probably a more apt term, since A. & P.'s new year-old management hopes the effort will sharpen both current skills and motivation.

THE DINES LETTER asks ...

GOLD AGAIN?

Mr. Dines now believes Golds have hit Bottom!

The recent monetary meetings of Rambouillet and Jamaica were widely hailed as a new monetary system that "replaced the Bretton Woods System" established in 1944. Less than a month had elapsed in 1976 when the Spanish peseta was devalued 10%, support for the Italian lira was withdrawn, and the French franc was rocked by selling. Mr. Dines asks, "Is this supposed to be the new, perfect monetary system which is to replace gold?" Mr. Dines notes that Portugal's recent loans were all gold-backed, revealing the efforts of the Washington Economic Establishment to "demonetize" gold as an unrealistic fantasy.

Nearly all commentators these days seem to either ignore gold or are negative on its prospects. Mr. Dines predicted at $35 that gold could get up to the $250-$400 range long-term. While this prophecy has not yet come true, Mr. Dines is sticking by his guns. Few appear to realize that golds are already moving. Here are the $ gains of some selected precious metals since their recent lows; The Dines Letter believes this is the start of a new gold bull market, although of course, there are no guarantees.

New Strategies for Option Dealings

By ROBERT METZ

Some traders and investors who are beginning to feel comfortable with listed option market calls are moving to new strategies in their search for profits.

A call gives the holder the right to buy 100 shares of a stock at a predetermined price within a set time. If a different call on the stock with the same or shorter maturity is sold short at the same time, the option trader has a "spread."

Spreads are becoming increasingly popular and can lead to quick profits—and losses—for the trader, and they can offer a relatively long-term strategy for the investor. The commissions involved are substantial.

Experts say that the bull spread, the strategy used by the nontrader, is being fairly widely used now—often not wisely, since some pay too much for the spread to allow a reasonable chance of profit.

In a bull spread, the option that is sold short has a higher striking price — that is, a higher price at which the option can be exercised.

In today's market individuals seeking bull spreads are looking for stocks that have not participated to any marked degree in the 1976 bull market.

The "spreader" hopes the stock he chooses will rise substantially and that he will profit on balance. That is to say, he hopes to sell his call at a substantially higher price and for more than enough to offset the loss he will experience in an up market in repurchasing the call on which he was short.

Here is an example of the strategy offered by Dennis L. Mirus, a principal of Evergreen Option Partners, a Chicago hedge fund.

He said that some believed that the shares of the Tesoro Petroleum Corporation at 15¾ were underpriced.

Using calls, the spreader might buy for 2¾—$275 per 100-share contract — the October 15's (a call with a striking price of 15 that falls due Oct. 15) and sell short the October 20's (striking price 20, due Oct. 15) at 1¼—$125.

The spreader puts up $150 — the difference between $275 and the $125 he receives when he sells the call short.

If Tesoro should close by mid-October at 22, the October 15's would be worth $2,200 minus roughly $1,500 (15 striking price times 100 shares), or about $700. The October 20's would be worth roughly $2,200 minus $2,000 (20 striking price times 100 shares), or about $200. The spreader would close out his spread by selling the 15's and repurchasing the 20's to clear $700 less $200, or $500.

The spreader would then subtract the cost of opening the spread from the $500—$150—and he has $350 less commissions, which Mr. Mirus says will run ¼ point to open the spread and ¼ to close it, or $50. His gain in this situation is thus reduced to $300.

But if the spreader held his position until the close of the option period and Tesoro shares were trading at less than 17, he would lose money. For example, if he were to close out his position with Tesoro shares at 16¾, his long option would be worth 1¾—$175 and his short position would be worthless.

Remember that he spent $150 to open the spread and he has received just $175 in closing it out. His commission costs of $50 would put him in the red by $25.

On the other hand, the most he can lose is $150 plus commissions, and he's had a shot at substantial profits in the meantime.

A Clarification

In a column on call options in this space recently, it was stated that one whose stock was called could circumvent the call through the purchase of an equivalent option.

This approach is rarely practical since equivalent options are seldom available after call holders begin to exercise their rights to shares. The call would ordinarily be met through the release of the called shares by the option writer.

Suit Against Ruder & Finn Dismissed

A suit that an aerosol company had filed against the public relations firm of Ruder & Finn was dismissed yesterday by Judge Richard Owen in Federal District Court here.

Ati Inc., the aerosol packaging company, charged in the suit that Ruder & Finn had violated the Sherman Antitrust Act. But the judge ruled in a two-page decision that Ati had not alleged that the public relations firm did anything to effect "competitive conditions in the marketplace."

Judge Owen said that "the heart of the complaint was that defendants threatened to defame plaintiff if it did not become a client of the defendant's public relations firm." The judge added that "it fails to state a Sherman Act violation."

Maritime Fruit Carriers Sale

The financially troubled Maritime Fruit Carriers Company said yesterday it had sold for $8 million all of its interests in two very large crude carriers under construction at Harland and Wolff shipyards, Belfast, Northern Ireland. It has completed drawing down an $8 million short-term financing commitment obtained during February. Maritime Fruit said the $8 million from the sale of the vessels and proceeds from the loan would be used primarily to meet the company's current working-capital needs.

Industrial Nations' Trade Growth Off

WASHINGTON, March 5 (Reuters)—The value of foreign trade of the industrial countries slowed sharply in 1975, the International Monetary Fund said today. The value of industrial countries' exports rose 6.1 percent to $534 billion against an increase in 1974 of 34 percent. Imports were virtually unchanged at $544 billion following a 40 percent increase the preceding year.

"Since both export and import prices of the industrial countries continued to increase substantially between 1974 and 1975, the actual slowdown in trade volume was greater than indicated by the dollar values alone," the I.M.F. said.

Computer Scanning for Profit Potential in

STOCKS UNDER $10

The 1973-74 market slide caused many stocks to fall to levels normally associated with outright speculation. Our current computer analysis, however, indicates that quality and price may be far out of line at this juncture, and that a number of these low-priced stocks may be at levels representing relatively little risk, and explosive upside potential. While we don't necessarily feel that they all make up one neat bullish package, we do believe that the computer's scanning ability may alert you to intriguing growth situations which might otherwise come to your attention only at higher prices.

How Value Line can help you achieve your own investment goals

...Efficiently and with a Minimum Expenditure of Your Own Time

Say your goals are: 7%-up yields...above average safety... plus the possibility of doubling within 3 to 5 years.

Recently we ran an "elimination scanning" of the 1600 stocks regularly covered by The Value Line Investment Survey to see how many stocks would "come through" for you if you are this kind of investor.

(a) You want stocks offering generous Yields of 7% or higher.
(b) You want stocks of superior Safety, which have demonstrated strong resistance to "yo-yo" price fluctuations.
(c) You want stocks which also offer rationally estimated Appreciation Potential of 100% or more in the next 3 to 5 years.
(d) You want stocks whose Market Performance in the next 12 months is likely to compare favorably with the market as a whole.

The small number of stocks that survive this elimination are the kind you can buy with some confidence even in today's market. But before looking at specific results, let us show you how easy it is, using Value Line, to pinpoint the stocks which best fit ANY set of investment objectives.

SUMMARY OF ADVICES
Every week—for EACH of 1600 stocks—Value Line's Summary of Advices presents these continually updated key evaluations and ratings:

- Estimated Yield in the next 12 months, based on dividends we estimated in the year ahead as a percentage of the stock's recent price.
- Rank for Investment Safety—from 1 (Highest) down to 5 (Lowest)—based on each stock's price volatility around its own long term trend.
- Appreciation Potential in the next 3 to 5 years—based on each stock's estimated per share earnings, P/E, and price range in that future time span.
- Rank for Probable Market Performance in the next 12 months—from 1 (Highest) down to 5 (Lowest)—relative to all 1600 stocks under review.

With the foregoing, you can currently compare any of the 1600 stocks against any or all of the rest under review on the basis of compatible measurements of value.

THE ELIMINATION PROCESS
Getting back to the investment criteria set forth earlier, The Value Line Investment Survey (Jan. 16) shows that of the 1600 stocks under review . . .

- 316 stocks currently provide Yields of 7% and up;
- Of these 316 stocks, 175 also offer Appreciation Potential of 100% or more, based on the midpoint of their estimated average price ranges 3 to 5 years hence;
- Of these 175 stocks, 50 are also ranked 1 (Highest) or 2 (Above Average) for Safety;
- Of these 50 stocks, 28 are also ranked Average or better (3, 2 or 1) for Probable Market Performance in the next 12 months relative to the other 1600 stocks. The others are ranked 4 or 5 and would best be avoided for the time being.

Caution: Not every stock will always perform in accordance with its Value Line rank for Performance, but such a high percentage have in the past, for reasons that are logical and can not be explained by chance, that you can reasonably expect to get better-than-average results by using the Value Line methods to achieve your own objectives.

With Value Line's new Summary of Advices on 1600 stocks (a regular part of the service) coming to you each week, you can readily sort out the stocks currently most appropriate for you. Then, we suggest you review the latest Value Line full-page Report on each before making your final decision.

You then will have incorporated into your own decision-making process, and with a minimum expenditure of your own time, thousands of hours of professional research. Let Value Line's seventy research analysts, its forty years of experience and its high-speed computers do your spade work for you.

COMPREHENSIVE RESEARCH
Each of the 1600 stocks under review is the subject of a comprehensive new full-page Report every 13 weeks in a regular rotation. You receive about 125 new Reports each week—1600 every 13 weeks. Each such stock Report gives you a concise analysis of recent developments and future prospects, a 10-year month-by-month price-and-volume chart and 23 series of vital financial and operating statistics going back 10 to 15 years and estimated 3 to 5 years ahead.

The regular weekly Value Line Survey also includes the Selection & Opinion section—giving Value Line's forecast of Business and the Stock Market, and the investment strategy Value Line recommends currently, with a detailed analysis of an Especially Recommended Stock plus a wealth of investment background including the Value Line Stock Averages.

SPECIAL INVITATION
If no one in your household has subscribed to Value Line in the last two years, we invite you now to receive the complete Value Line Investment Survey—including everything outlined above—for the next 12 weeks for only $29 (almost 50% off the regular rate).

St. Louis Reserve Bank Appoints New President

Lawrence K. Roos, executive vice president and director of the First National Bank in St. Louis yesterday was appointed president of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, known for its independent point of view and quality of its monetary research.

Mr. Roos, who is 58, was supervisor of St. Louis County from 1962 to 1974. He joined the First National Bank in January 1975.

He will assume his new position on March 22, succeeding Darryl R. Francis, who retired on March 1 at 63. Mr. Francis had been the principal spokesman within the Fed for the monetarist viewpoint.

There had been reports in the banking community of disagreement between the Federal Reserve Board in Washington and the St. Louis directors over Mr. Francis's successor. However, informed sources said earlier this week that the St. Louis board would "name their own man" in spite of the long list of suggested candidates given to them by Arthur F. Burns, chairman of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. Roos said yesterday that he was not a professional economist and that he was "not an apostle of any school of economic thought." He said however, that he intended to "place a great deal of importance in the briefings I am sure I will receive from the St. Louis staff, for which I have the highest regard."

Changes in Federal tax law to end "illogical treatment of capital gains and losses" and provide incentives for additional capital investment were urged yesterday by James J. Needham, chairman of the New York Stock Exchange.

In testimony before the Joint Economic Committee of the Congress, Mr. Needham noted that in raising capital, corporations now are relying more on debt financing than issuance of new stock. Present tax law, he said, permits companies to deduct debt interest, while dividends have to be paid out of after-tax profits and are also taxed as income for shareholders.

Such tax treatment, the Big Board official said, "reduces incentives to take risk and the double taxation of corporate profits distributed as dividends significantly reduces potential after-tax yields, especially for those in the higher income brackets.

Also testifying before the Joint Economic Committee, Charles G. Bluhdorn, chairman of Gulf and Western Industries, warned that as recovery spurred greater oil imports the nation again would be exposed to "blackmail" by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Mr. Bluhdorn said he disagreed sharply with the view that OPEC had been weakened by the recession-caused decline in oil consumption.

"OPEC," he asserted, "is stronger today than it has been since its inception. OPEC has been waiting for our prosperity to return. OPEC will use the first opportunity to hit us hard on top of the head with new increases when they see they again have us firmly in their grasp."

Noting that domestic production of oil "is steadily deteriorating," he added that when OPEC again raised prices, "we will again submit because we will be scared to death of what an effective protest could do to our resurging economy."

The United States Shoe Corporation announced yesterday that William F. Schmitz, its president and chief operating officer since 1973, had resigned for personal reasons. He will be succeeded May 1 by Stanley H. Rutstein, president and chief operating officer of the company's Casual Corner women's apparel retail chain.

The Cincinnati-based company is one of the country's largest footwear suppliers, with operations extending through manufacturing, importing, wholesaling and retailing. It is also engaged in specialty apparel retailing through more than 220 of its own outlets.

Mr. Schmitz, who is 53, will become chairman and chief executive officer of the company's men's footwear division, which has headquarters in Beloit, Wis. He will serve aso as a senior group vice president of the parent company.

Mr. Rutstein, who is 34, joined the Casual Corner division 12 years ago and became its president and chief operating officer in 1971.

Robert Solomon, an adviser and senior staff member of the Federal Reserve Board in Washington, will take early retirement in May. Mr. Solomon, who is 55, joined the board in 1947 and has had a major part in international monetary negotiations since 1966. His retirement plans include research and writing.

Russians' Deficit in Trade Widening

the type of industries he had in mind, but a number of projects being pressed by the Russians are designed to aid mainly exports. One is the 2,000-mile Baikal-Amur Mainline, a 10-year rail construction project in Far Eastern Siberia that will help open up new resource areas specifically for export through Pacific ports.

The adverse trend in the Soviet Union's trade with the West apparently started in the last quarter of 1974, according to a study of the Central Intelligence Agency on recent developments in Soviet hard-currency trade.

Deficit Aggravated

The deficit, which began with a decline in Western demand and prices for Soviet raw materials, was further aggravated during 1975 by the large grain purchases arising from the Russians' crop failure, the worst in a decade.

The situation has been further compounded by a sudden spurt in deliveries of Western machinery under contracts placed by the Soviet Union in 1973 and 1974. This surge in shipments of advanced technology was particularly evident in the case of the United States.

According to complete 1975 figures just released by the Department of Commerce, the United States shipped $547 million worth of machinery and equipment to the Soviet Union last year, compared with a little more than $200 million in each of the two preceding years.

This sharp increase in technology exports, combined with grain shipments worth $1.1 billion, produced a record trade gap in Soviet-United States exchanges. American exports totaled $1.8 billion in 1975, compared with imports from the Soviet Union of $277 million, or a ratio of almost 7-to-1.

Imbalance May Continue

The imbalance is expected to continue this year as grain exports and machinery deliveries continue and Soviet export performance is hampered both by the discriminatory American import tariffs and a generally slack American demand for Soviet goods.

The Soviet statistics for the first half of 1975 show that trade with Moscow's East European allies was balanced at the equivalent of $9 billion each way, but that Russian imports from outside the Soviet bloc's trading community were $9.1 billion, compared with exports of $6.7 billion, accounting for the six-month deficit of $2.4 billion.

The increasing involvement of the Soviet Union in international trade was pointed up by Foreign Trade Minister Nikolai S. Patolichev in an interview published Feb. 19 in the Soviet Government newspaper Izvestia.

He said that the trade level projected in the last five-year plan for 1975 had actually been reached in 1973, and that trade turnover during the five-year period 1971-75 more than doubled, reaching $67 billion. Western industrial countries accounted for 31.2 percent of the total, Communist countries 56.3 percent and the third world 12.5 percent, Mr. Patolichev said.

Response Is Mixed to Request By Gulf for Return of Payments

PITTSBURGH, March 5 (AP)—Initial response to the Gulf Oil Corporation's request that politicians who accepted illegal corporate campaign contributions return the money has been mixed, a check shows.

Although Gulf would not say who was contacted for reimbursements, a spokesman said the names were reported by John J. McCloy, a prominent New York attorney, in a 300-page document detailing Gulf's internal investigation of the political contributions.

Some of the named recipients, such as Senator Howard H. Baker Jr., Republican of Tennessee, and Representative John H. Heinz 3d, Republican of Pennsylvania, told reporters yesterday they were returning the money. Others, such as Senator William E. Brock 3d, Republican of Tennessee, and Senator Russell B. Long, Democrat of Louisiana, said they had no record of receiving Gulf money. Senator Hugh Scott, Republican of Pennsylvania, and Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, Democrat of Minnesota, said they were referring Gulf's letter to their attorneys.

Senator Baker said he received a letter from Gulf asking that half of the $5,000 contribution he received in 1972 be returned as an illegal donation and that he would do so.

A spokesman for Mr. Heinz, who got contributions totaling $6,000 for campaigns in 1971 and 1972, said the Congressman was returning the full amount, even though he accepted the money with the understanding that it was legally contributed by Gulf employes.

Senator Henry M. Jackson, Democrat of Washington, a candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination, said he had returned a $10,000 contribution more than two years ago, "the minute we learned that it had been a corporate rather than a personal contribution, as we had been told."

"Since these alleged contributions were not alleged to have been for me or for my benefit I would suggest that Gulf direct its appeal for funds elsewhere," Senator Long said.

EQUITY FINANCING

Skaggs Companies, a Salt Lake City-based retail drugstore chain, yesterday said it had filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission in connection with a proposed sale of 1 million common shares through underwriters headed by Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc.

Pact Urged to Fight Corporate Bribes

months or more," said Senator William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin, and Mr. Ingersoll agreed.

In his testimony, Mr. Ingersoll said the United States was "proposing two new actions to deal with the international bribery problem."

"First," he said, was "a multilateral agreement to be negotiated within the United Nations system to help deter and punish such activities, and [second] a framework for bilateral cooperation with foreign law-enforcement agencies with which we can make satisfactory arrangements for the exchange of evidence."

Mr. Ingersoll said this "multilateral agreement on corrupt practices" would be submitted to the United Nations Permanent Commission on Transnational Corporations meeting now in Lima, Peru.

In a related development, a Senate subcommittee on multinational corporations completed two days of closed hearings today on allegations that Lockheed tried to pay off West German officials to promote sales of its accident-plagued F104 Starfighter.

No details were disclosed, but subcommittee sources said the panel might hold further meetings next week.

Recent disclosures by Senate investigators and Securities and Exchange Commission documents have indicated that Lockheed and many other United States companies have paid millions of dollars to overseas agents and foreign government officials to promote sales abroad.

The disclosures have provoked Government investigation of the charges in Japan and the Netherlands, and Mr. Ingersoll made it plain that the United States Government had been shaken by the reaction.

"Grievous damage has been done to the foreign relations of the United States by recent disclosures of unsubstantiated allegations against foreign officials," Mr. Ingersoll testified.

"A number of foreign governments have expressed great concerns about disclosures resulting from Senate investigations [in the Lockheed case] or reports attributed to those investigations that are said to implicate high officials.

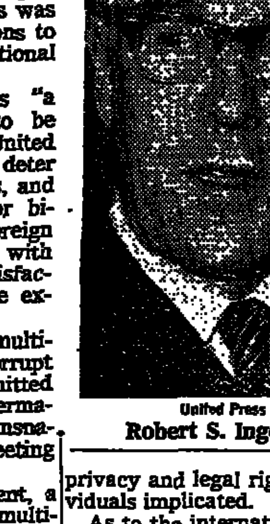
"These governments have requested the Department of State's assistance to obtain the documentation necessary to investigate these allegations."

Mr. Ingersoll said news reports had made it appear that the State Department had not been cooperating in the requests from Japan, the Netherlands and other nations, and added, "We do not have the corporate documents in question."

"These, where they exist, are held by Lockheed, by the Senate subcommittee on multinational corporations or the Securities and Exchange Commission subject to a court order," he said.

To end this controversy and cooperate with requesting nations, Mr. Ingersoll said, the State Department is consulting the S.E.C. and the Justice Department on starting an exchange of information on bribery cases with foreign governments.

He said the Justice Department would enter into cooperative arrangements with foreign law-enforcement agencies to exchange such information under regulations protecting the privacy and legal rights of individuals implicated.



United Press International

Robert S. Ingersoll

As to the international agreement outlawing "corrupt practices," Mr. Ingersoll said it would cover trade and investment transactions involving governments and would apply equally to those who offered bribes and those who accepted them.

He said it would establish "clear guidelines" on the use of sales agents for government procurements and would "establish appropriate criminal penalties for bribery and extortion by enterprises and officials."

New Arms Policy Seen

WASHINGTON, March 5 (AP)—Senior defense officials at the Pentagon today predicted that a Government wide policy would be developed against the offering of bribes by United States companies for foreign arms salen. They said Congress might be asked to provide sharper legal teeth to deal with the problem.

Officials said the Defense Department was limited in the actions it could take in such cases. Money obtained from the Defense Department may not be used for such purposes, but the Pentagon is legally powerless to interfere if a contractor uses other money, they added.

However, one official indicated that pressure could be brought by letting companies know their actions could affect future business from the Defense Department.

Dutch Meeting Canceled

THE HAGUE, March 5 (UPI)—The Bilderberg Conference, an annual meeting of the influential figures at which Prince Bernhard presides, has been canceled, apparently because of an investigation into whether the Prince was involved in the Lockheed bribery scandal.

A spokesman for the Bilderberg Secretariat announced the cancellation after a Dutch newspaper said conference participants were wary of meeting pending the results of an inquiry into allegations that Prince Bernhard received $1.1 million in payoffs from Lockheed.

This year's meeting was scheduled to be held in Hot Springs, W. Va., from April 23 to 25.

Belgium Begins Inquiry

BRUSSELS, March 5 (Reuters)—Belgium has begun an inquiry into allegations that Lockheed distributed gifts and bribes to Belgian officials, Prime Minister Leo Tindemans announced today.

Venezuelans Hit Occidental

CARACAS, Venezuela, March 5 (UPI)—The Occidental Petroleum Corporation is guilty of bribing Venezuelans to win oilfields here, a congressional report said today, calling on the Government to halt more than $28 million in compensation payments for the Los Angeles-based company.

The preliminary report, released by a joint Venezuelan congressional committee that has been investigating alleged bribe payments made by Occidental since last year, said "the bribery is no longer presumed but rather evident, public and notorious."

the commission. Meantime, it has also issued instructions that such practices be stopped, the statement continued.

Cyanamid reported that no deduction was taken for United States or foreign income tax purposes for most of these payments. The effect, if any, of the payments on the United States Federal income tax liability of Cyanamid has not yet been determined and "any such effect could not be material in amount," it said. The company added that "if it is determined that there is an additional liability, appropriate action will be taken."

The company operates 40 principal foreign subsidiaries worldwide. Last year it earned $147.7 million, or $3.09 a share, on sales of $1.928 billion.

Other drug companies that recently made announcements of similar payments include American Home Products, Merck, Schering-Plough, G. D. Searle, Merrill Richardson and Baxter Laboratories.

contributions outside the United States.

"They were all made according to the law of that country," he said. "They were all legal."

The Wall Street Journal reported today that Boeing's chairman, T. A. Wilson, in an interview about the foreign payments, denied any wrongdoing and said the situation was not similar to that of the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation, an aerospace concern that has acknowledged paying bribes to foreign officials.

Mr. Prince said the payments were not bribes. He said none of the payments Boeing made to Government officials could be considered a bribe because those receiving the money were not in a position to influence aircraft sales.

Mr. Prince said he considers the situation "quite different from Lockheed," though he noted that "there have been all sorts of things discovered about Lockheed and there were very few of them that were illegal.

"We would have done some things differently, but I'm not saying we have done anything we shouldn't have done."

Boeing's overseas sales during the five-year period totaled $5.5 billion.

COPIER-DUPLICATORS INTRODUCED BY I.B.M.

The International Business Machines Corporation's Office Products division introduced two models of its I.B.M. Series III copier-duplicator in Chicago yesterday. The new models are reportedly much faster than the previous line and feature an advanced document feed, completely automated duplexing and a rated speed of 4,500 copies an hour. Optional with both models, designated Model 10 and Model 20, are one of two collators, each with 20 bins.

First copies are produced in 4.5 seconds and subsequent copies every eighth-tenths of a second, or 75 a minute. The automatic duplexing system makes it possible to copy both sides of either letter-size or legal-size sheets by pushing a button. The Model 20 also offers two reduction modes that enable 26 or 35 percent reductions in copy sizes from the original.

The Model 10 will sell for $26,000 and the Model 20 for $29,000.

Light Bulb Costing $10 May Last for 10 Years

WASHINGTON, March 5 (UPI)—The Energy Research and Development Administration today announced plans for commercial production of a revolutionary new light bulb that consumes 70 percent less electricity and may not burn out for 10 years.

The spokesman said the "Litek" bulb, which might sell for about $10 apiece, looks like an ordinary 100-watt incandescent bulb but has no wire filaments and works more like a fluorescent lamp tube. He said it would fit in standard screw-in lamp sockets.

The energy agency said it would help develop the commercial version of the Litek bulb over the next year under a $310,000 contract with the Lighting Technology Corporation of Fullerton, Calif.

Citibank announced yesterday that it was keeping its prime rate at 6¾ percent. The rate had been raised from 6½ percent on Feb. 27.

Four-Year Notes Sold At Treasury Auction

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 5—The Treasury sold today $2 billion of four-year notes at an average return of 7.54 percent. The Treasury received $5.4 billion of tenders for the notes, which will carry a coupon interest rate of 7½ percent.

Accepted tenders included 34 percent of the bids at the highest yield. The Treasury awarded $700 million of noncompetitive tenders at the average price of 99.853.

In the sale, bids ranged from a low yield of 7.50 percent to a high yield of 7.55 percent.

Patents: An Electronic Voting Machine

By STACY V. JONES
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 5—Since she graduated in 1962 from Barnard College, where she studied mathematics and government, Susan Huhn has been working to help people vote. She has sold and serviced balloting equipment, published manuals, and conferred with hundreds of officials.

Patents of the Week

This week she was granted Patent 3,941,976 for her own electronic voting machine, which will be used for the first time this spring by the Community Development Agency in New York, which administers the poverty program.

Miss Huhn is president of Valid Vote Inc., Concord, Mass., which she organized to manufacture the machine, with financing by the Venture Capital Fund of Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis, Inc.

The inventor describes her valid vote machine, which weighs 35 pounds, as a compact replacement for the 700-pound level-type mechanical voting machines, and as duplicating all their functions. The voter selects candidates by pushing switches that can provide as many as 256 choices. Selection lights can be turned on and off until the choice is final.

Miss Huhn has for years helped unions administer their elections. Besides some for union use, she has written official election procedure manuals for Massachusetts, Connecticut, Illinois and Minnesota.

Miss Huhn's first experience with service and sales came as an associate of her father, Thomas Huhn, himself a distributor of automatic voting machines to replace paper ballots and punch cards. She has received many inquiries about her own machine, and expects increasing interest during this election year.

Charting Heat Sources

Two California geologists have devised a method of charting the potentially valuable sources of heat in the earth's interior by detecting certain natural electrical signals with an instrument in a moving car.

Wayne L. Sayer and Pat Wright of the Geothermal Research Corporation in Walnut Creek, were granted Patent 3,942,101 for the method this week. They believe it will make commercially feasible the harnessing of abundant sources of geothermal energy not previously available because of the expense of locating them.

According to the patent, electrical currents from the earth are reflected in electrostatis voltage gradients above the ground in proportion to the magnitude of nearby subterranean geothermal sources. In the patented procedure, the gradients are recorded and mapped.

The inventors found that movement over the earth's surface was required for the surveys. They were not certain, but suspected that "in place" reading was interfered with by air static voltages. In a car they mounted a strip chart recorded for automatic operation over the selected routes. In tests, 40 miles per hour proved a practical speed, and parallel paths along the earth's magnetic lines of force were found preferable.

After the informattion is plotted on a field map it can be evaluated by a specialist for decisions as to further tests and drilling. The inventors call their method a reconnaissance tool.

Aircraft Housing

Lieut. Col. Charles Lindbergh of the air force (but not the Charles Augustus Lindbergh who made the first solo flight across the Atlantic Ocean) was awarded a patent this week for a self-erecting structure to house aircraft.

Col. Lindbergh invented the structure while assigned to the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, and made a small-scale model there. He was later assigned to duty in West Germany.

Patent 3,940,892 refers to the building as a "pop-up" structure, erected by hydraulic pressure. The sections can be air-transported or trucked to the site, hinged together and raised by pump pressure into a long arch. For recovery, the valves can be opened and the structure relaxed. Or for more permanent use, strength can be added by welding the joints and the hydraulic elements.

Drunk Driving Preventer

A device for preventing drunken driving of a vehicle, whether car or aircraft, tests the person's memory and visual capability. Yasuhisa Takeuchi, of Yokosuka, Japan, was granted patent 3,942,151 this week, assigning it to the Nissan Motor Company, Ltd.

Several different digits selected at random are flashed one at a time onto a screen for the driver to memorize. Then a full set of digits, such as 1 through 9, is displayed in numerical order, also one at a time. The driver is expected to press a button when each of those he memorized appears on the screen. If he fails in the test, the car's engine is shut off.

A.&P. Is Retraining All Its Employees From A to Z

1970's—the retraining effort may be the most massive that any company has undertaken in years.

A. & P. is preparing to expand the retraining program through a new facility it is building next to its headquarters site in Montvale, N.J. The new structure, to be known as A. & P.'s Center for Professional Development will be in operation some time next year. It will accommodate 150 trainees at one time and its own staff and have its own television studio for the development of internal TV communications.

On the theory that indoctrination of new principles of service and performance work best when all employee levels are included, retraining will work from the top down to provide coodinated and uniform orientation. The program will proceed lebel by level, the instructions of each meshing with those of the others.

The effort began early last month when Mr. Scott, Mr. Gentry and Mr. Longacre took four days off to attend a top-management briefing in Phoenix held by the Presidents Association of the American Management Association. Along with top executives of electronicse, computer, research and other companies, the A. & P. men heard lectures by psychologists, consultants and businessmen on management principles and motivation.

Later, 31 mid-management A. & P. executives participated in similar briefings for 3½ days.

The program is geared to avoid the common problem of concentrating on either mid-management or on only several employee levels "and thus to preclude having only some aspects of the business motivated and hoping that others will be. too." said Charles J. Tackney, A. & P.'s vice president for training.

"To become a healthy company," he added, "we have to manage every single aspect of the company efficiently and make each store a consumer-oriented one."

The retraining program now calls for two sets of briefings proceeding simultaneously. One will be separate sessions for 188 district managers; 152 meat merchandisers; 120 produce merchandisers; 500 field supervisors; and all 2,200 store managers. The second will be a vast effort of its own—the retraining of about 27,000 employees who man the checkouts of all the A.& P. stores.

As a result, while the typical shopper may be unaware of it, except if she sees a group of employees receiving a short talk by a field training supervisor, the nation's second-largest food chain will be indoctrinating all its employees as they go about their business. They will be concentrating in classrooms and in the stores on what is required to provide efficient, courteous service; clean, well-functioning stores; and food in at least acceptable, attractive condition.

The public probably may relate A. & P.'s revitalized efforts to the big chain's current promotion tied around "Price and Pride," with two symbolic A. & P. employees appropriately tagged by those names and acting as personifications of the company:s "quality and value" campaign. Customers are invited in commercials and advertisements to return to A. & P. and share in the benefits of that campaign.

Internally, the retraining effort also stresses pride.

"The top management briefings in which our people participated concentrated on the principle that subordinates function best in a healthy environment or when they get satisfaction in their work," Mr. Tackney said. "This means that when people are involved, when they participate in planning and when they are convinced they are part of the team, the results improve."

In the stores themselves, training sessions for employees at the checkout counters or in produce departments are also aimed at convincing employees that professional skills and courteous service are "what brings the customer back again and again. It's an appeal to an employee's pride and self-respect," said Mr. Tackney, "and we also take the extra step of singling out some who have been retrained to become the training officer of others in the store"

The drive for improved motivation at A.& P. appears to be paying off.

In a recent interview, Mr. Scott disclosed that the company was operating in the black and might return to the industry profit average of 0.8 percent of sales in the current fiscal year, which began last Monday, or in the next one. The last year in which A. & P. operated profitably was 1973, when it had a net income of $12.2 million, its lowest in some time. But the company had large deficits in 1972 and 1974. It has not yet reported its 1975 results.

Despite the rate rises, freight revenues totalled only $1.91 billion, down $67.8 million, and total revenues of $2.17 billion were down $74 million.

The railroad has been able to keep operating despite these massive losses only because a provision of the bankruptcy law allows the company to discontinue payments of interest on pre-bankruptcy debts, rents and state and local taxes. These sums are counted as expenses, although not actually disbursed.

The railroad's other sustenance has been Federal grants of $107.5 million in 1975 and $19.8 million in 1974. For the month of December, the corresponding figures were $20.7 million and $10 million.

Bowater Names Executive

John P. Fucigna has joined Bowater Inc. as its treasurer, the company announced yesterday. It is the management company for all Bowater pulp and paper interests in North America. Mr. Fucigna had been with the Martin-Marietta Corporation 12 years.

American Motors Again Cuts Output For Pacer Model

Special to The New York Times

DETROIT, March 5—Because of disappointing sales and high stocks, the American Motors Corporation said today it was cutting back Pacer production 25 percent more in a move that will indefinitely lay off another 1,000 workers at its Wisconsin plants.

The company said that next week it would reduce the Pacer production rate from 640 to 480 a day.

It is the second production cutback this year. In January, A.M.C. cut Pacer output 20 percent from 800 a day to 640, a move that laid off 1,000 other workers. A.M.C. had a 137-day supply of Pacer cars on hand last month, according to the trade paper, Automotive News. By comparison, the industry average is a 67-day supply.

"We got up to 12,000 to 14,000 sales monthly in May or June which was high and at that point we began looking at an annual rate of 160,000 to 170,000 a year.

"Now it's down to a 100,000 annual rate, off 20,000 from where it was projected.

"One reason the rate was abnormally high last year is that the car, with its wide expanse of glass, was so different that it attracted a number of people who otherwise would not have bought it."

Thyssen-Bornemisza Withdraws Proposal

Thyssen-Bornemisza Inc. which owns more than 90 percent of tha outstanding common shares of Indian Head Inc., said yesterday that it had withdrawn its proposal to make Indian Head a wholly owned subsidiary.

Certain court decisions, the company said, had created uncertainties concerning the proposal. A lawsuit instituted against it in connection with the merger plan had been withdrawn by the plaintiffs, according to Thyssen-Bornemiza.

G. & W. Extends Offer For Madison Square Garden

Gulf and Western Industries, Inc., said yesterday that it was extending its offer for common shares of the Madison Square Garden Corporation until 5 P.M. April 2, 1976. The offer was scheduled to expire yesterday.

Terms call for Gulf & Western to purchase at $5.50 net all shares tendered up to 500,000 shares. The company said that about 90,000 shares of Madison Square Garden had been tendered so far bringing the Gulf & Western holding to 39 percent of the total.

Total Employed Rose to July '74 P

The New York Times/Mar

Associated Press reported.

George Meany, president of the A.F.L.-C.I.O., said the "official figures seriously understate unemployment in America." Counting discouraged workers who have stopped looking for work and workers on part-time hours because full-time work is not available, the total number unemployed last month was 9.9 million, or 10.5 percent of the labor force, Mr. Meany contended in a statement.

Labor Department analysts said that the strongest single figure in the February report was a gain of 210,000 in nonfarm payroll employment, the eighth consecutive monthly advance for this bellwether indicator of economic trends. Recalls of laid-off auto and construction workers apeared to be a major element in February.

But even so, the total of 78.3 million people on nonfarm payrolls, while up two million from the June 1975 recession low, was still 490,000 below the historic high of September 1974, when the country's worst economic slump since the 1930's began to spiarl downward.

There were other indications that despite the considerable improvement in the employment situation in recent months, it remained far from healthy in February.

"At 7.6 percent, the unemployment rate continued at a high level by historical standards," the Commissioner of Labor Statistics, Julius Shiskin, told the Joint Economic Committee of Congress.

The small decline of 154,000 in unemployment last month was diffused among various categories of workers. However, the department found one marked sign of improvement. The number of persons out of work 15 weeks or longer fell substantially, by 270,000 to 2,515,000. The gain was centered in the category 15 to 26 weeks. The average duration of all unemployment fell appreciably, to 16.2 weeks from 16.9.

A pronounced downward trend in total unemployment began in October, when the national rate was 8.6 percent. In January, it fell sharply to 7.8 percent from 8.3 percent, giving rise to charges by Mr. Meany and others that there were technical errors in the January calculations and that the January drop was at least partly an aberration. Indeed, Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, had acknowledged that there could be a rebound in February.

The further February decline was hailed by Mr. Ford as proving that "last month's decrease was not a fluke, but for real."

The unpublished figures for the jobless rate on the Labor Department's work sheets were these: January, 7.798 percent, February, 7.636 percent, rounding, up for January and down for February, stretched to two-tenths of a percentage point, a difference regarded by statisticians as more accurately stated as 0.162.

Usually, the analysts said, a change of less than two-tenths is regarded as so small as to be within the margin of error and lacking statistica cance. Had such a dip an increase the month, the departme have called it essen change, they said.

Modest Declin

But because the sma continued a trend peared to have beer well established, the was regarded as a g modest decline.

The department rep the jobless rate for heads, one importan economic conditions, low 5 percent to 4. for the first time 1974. The rate for ma was steady at 4.1 perc

The unemployed rat white males 20 years held steady at 1.2 p more than twice the rate for whites of the For non white women 12.2 percent, up fro cent in January, wa twice the 6.7 percen white women.

Among nonwhite more than one in percent — were j against 17.1 percent teen-agers.

CONFIDENTIALLY

we think this is one of the most gracious, practical, and comfortable colonials to hit the Spring market. Inviting Center Hall, 30' living room with handsome fireplace, formal dining room, plus the much needed extra room on first. Marvelous master suite (bedroom, bath, dressing room, and sitting room), two other rooms, and bath on second. The third floor has two very nice rooms and two full baths. An independent in-law could have a lovely apartment there. Deep, level backyard. Two car garage. Listed today at $59,500. Don't pass it by.

SUNSHINE SPECIAL

Many attractive windows give a bright and airy feel to this small colonial. Center Hall, den with cozy fireplace, living room opening on to sun-porch (green thumb room), full dining room, pantry, and good kitchen on first. 3 bedrooms plus study or nursery and tile bath on second. Small "rec" room with bar and full bath in basement. The formal rose garden and sizable fish pond are extra special. $46,500.

needed a lot of remedial work before they could begin even their freshman courses."

As for York's being fundamentally a two-year school, the faculty report points out that all of the college's programs are for four years and that the professional programs offered are all designed to meet needs for four-year college graduates.

Preparation Is Noted

"We have 15 pre-med and pre-dental kids in the last graduating class," said Arthur Marcus, executive assistant to York College's president, Milton G. Bassin, "and 11 of them got into United States medical schools. Not Guadalajara or Bologna, but right here in the U.S. where kids cut each other's throats to get a place."

Dr. Robert Parmet, an associate professor of history at York, noted that 85 percent of all faculty members at the assistant professor or professor level had their doctoral degrees. Dr. Barry Gross, chairman of the history and philosophy department, said that the York philosophy department "is the hardest-grading philosophy department in C.U.N.Y.

"York students," he said, "have gone on to law school, medical school and a variety of graduate schools."

"As for cost effectiveness," one York administrator said, "the 1968 cost per student here was $3,200, when dollars bought a lot more than they do now. This year it is down to $2,600, and next year it would be $2,450, which is in the range of other schools in the system."

"We are criticized on the grounds that our deep involvement in the community practically makes us a community college already," said another faculty member. "I remember in the 1960's when Columbia and City College were not involved in the community and they got into a lot of trouble. Now we're to be penalized for being involved."

He noted that York students and faculty members were deeply involved in social, educational and health programs in and around Jamaica.

York College was conceived in the 1960's at a time when enrollment in the existing branches of the City University had swelled almost to the breaking point and when educators first began to emphasize the need for colleges closer to, and more involved with, the communities they served.

In Makeshift Quarters

In fact, one of the first controversies in which York was involved centered on whether it should be located at Fort Hamilton, a beautiful but relatively remote site on the Lower Bay, or in the center of rapidly deteriorating Jamaica.

The Jamaica site won out and, from its start, the college was seen as the focal point for the rehabilitation of the area. "If the school goes under, not one private developer will touch this neighborhood," a faculty member said. "York is the key to everything around here."

Two years ago, Mayor Beame revealed a $62.5 million construction program for York that, if completed, would end the school's nine-year history of finding makeshift quarters in rented space. So far, two buildings of what was planned to be a 50-acre complex have been completed.

Mr. Marcus said York's rental bill was minuscule compared with those of some other City University colleges.

"After June 30," he said, "our net rental bill will be $161,000. We are allocated $577,000 in the current budget, of which almost $300,000 is for a lease-purchase arrangement on a building that will belong to us at the end of three years."

Mr. Marcus said Baruch College's rental bill each year was $2.1 million, Brooklyn College's $1.5 million and Hunter College's $2.2 million.

The community and student reaction to the possible change in York's status has been vociferous. Last Wednesday, several thousand students staged a march through Jamaica.

On Monday, students from York will join those from other colleges affected by the chancellor's plan in a demonstration outside the City University Graduate Center on West 42d Street in Manhattan. A demonstration in Albany is being planned for the following week students said yesterday.

Hostos Community College students blocking intersection of 149th Street and the Grand Concourse during protest.

. . . While Hostos College Resists Its Elimination

By DAVID VIDAL

Lucila Caranton speaks little English, works nights at a garment factory in Long Island City, Queens, and came to this country five years ago from her native Colombia, "to battle alone."

The background and present situation of the 45-year-old woman are not unlike that of many of the students of the bilingual Eugenio Maria de Hostos Community College in the Bronx, which is threatened with being shut down because of the city's fiscal crisis.

"This is really my only alternative," the third-semester student in liberal arts said in Spanish between breaks in classes.

"If the school closes, I can't get to where I want to because my English is still not good enough," she said, adding that a transfer to another City University school "would be very difficult because of my English."

The chancellor of the City University, Dr. Robert J. Kibbee, is proposing to close Hostos, along with John Jay and Richmond Colleges, as part of a plan to trim $60 million from the budget of the Board of Higher Education in the next three years. The two-year college has a current budget of $7.6 million, and the plans calls for its programs and student body to be incorporated into Bronx Community College.

A Majority of Women

The Hostos main building is at East 149th Street and the Grand Concourse in the economically depressed South Bronx. It offers 69 courses in Spanish for its more than 2,600 students, half of whom are more than 27 years old, 65 percent of whom are Hispanic, mostly Puerto Rican. A majority of the students are women, and the enrollment has been steadily climbing.

The colege is different from al other units of the City University, not only because it is bilingual and the first municipal college deliberately placed in a depressed area, but also because it adopts a teaching style organized to let each student learn in his own way and at his own pace. It was conceived as a model for open admissions when it opened in 1968.

The unusual nature of the school, its largely adult and varied student body of married men and women, veterans, prison inmates, recent immigrants and minority-group members, has led many there to express incredulity that it may close.

"It seems to be that when you have one of a species, you try to preserve it," said Lawrence Harris, a 24-year-old black who began his first semester there on Feb. 10.

He said he had no plans for seeking entry to another college because he did not believe the students would let Hostos be closed.

"Thisi s the No. 1 school on the minority parade," he said. "Now they seem to be saying that the students will have to pay for a mistake made by the bigwigs who didn't know how to keep a budget."

A 'Homey Atmosphere'

Mr. Harris, who dropped out of Evander Childs High School in 1968 and then served as a bank security guard, said he entered Hostos because of its locality and "homey atmosphere"—two prime reasons cited by the students, who seem to have a deep personal involvement with their institution.

Barbara Thompson, 38, has an 8-year-old son whom she often brings to Hostos because there is no one at home who can take care of him. She is in her third semester of studies in radiology.

"Where else can you come to class and bring your child?" she asked. "This is a unique school and now everywhere we go it will be difficult to get in. Where will they put us?"

Mrs. Thompson, who is attending college after a 15-year interruption in her education, also said she could not believe the college would be closed.

Teresa Martinez, 21, an unwed mother of an 8-month-old child, described herself as belonging to a group "that has the least chance of getting accepted into another college if Hostos closes."

A first-semester student, she is in a program called Libra—which evokes a meaning of "freedom" in Latin and Spanish—under which the context of courses in chemistry, psychology or mathematics is coordinated with a program of increasing skills in grammar and writing for some and improving English-speaking ability for others.

"I won't have another chance like this to go to school," said the Bronx resident, who had not been to school in four years.

Worried About Future

"My mother is Hawaiian and she is not happy with New York," she said. "She takes care of my baby, but now she wants to go back home. It can cost $80 a week to find a baby sitter but where am I going to get that kind of money?"

Jose Tejada, 32, said he was a veteran of Vietnam, of the Dominican crisis and had even been on a United States base in Cuba.

"I spent all those years defending the country and now that I want to go to school I can't," said Mr. Tejada, the father of one child. "I hope they don't close the school. If they do, I guess I'll have to start all over again."

In a third-floor room, 300 Hostos students were holding a pep rally and shouting such slogans in Spanish as "Hostos Unido, Jamas Sera Vencido!" — Hostos United Will Never Be Defeated! Plans were laid for marches on City Hall and on the home of Chancellor Kibbee.

Guillermo Chang, 29, was feeling his way down the hall with his cane. The blind, second-year student in liberal arts, said he came to Hostos because his poor English ability prevented him from going to City College.

"I don't believe it will close," said the Cuban exile of partial oriental extraction, "it's just talk. Politics."

If it closed, he said, he would probably go on to City College because after his year at Hostos he was "finally getting a hold on the language."

Meetings at City Hall

The resident of Hostos, Gandido de Leon, has been meeting with persons at City Hall "to make sure they see this problem in its proper perspective."

"This is the only effort the city has made to respond to the Hispanic community," he said. "The fact that these people are here is proof that the regular university system was not responding to their needs.

"It seems to me it is just completely incredible that anyone can propose or go ahead with this seriously."

Teacher Group in State Leaves National Education Association

By LEONARD BUDER

The New York State United Teachers voted yesterday to disaffiliate from the National Education Association, a move that is certain to lead to the withdrawal of some N.E.A. loyalists from the 211,000-member state union. The vote was 157,400 to 37,729.

The United Teachers was formed nearly four years ago by merger of two rival organizations—one affiliated with the N.E.A. and the other with the American Federation of Teachers.

Delegates to the United Teachers' annual representative assembly took the disaffiliation action after two hours of debate and after a number of their leaders and members asserted that the N.E.A. had already declared war on their union by committing acts of staff "piracy" and "industrial sabotage."

Even before the formal vote was taken at the New York Hilton Hotel, the N.E.A. had said that, if disaffiliation took place, the organization would set up a new state group for those teachers who did not want to give up their N.E.A. ties.

Bargaining Fights Expected

This development is expected to set the stage for a new and bitter organizational battle for members and bargaining rights in many school districts and college campuses throughout the state.

Until the disaffiliation with the N.E.A. takes formal effect at the close of the delegate assembly tomorrow, members of the United Teachers belong to both national organizations. After tomorrow, those who remain in the United Teachers will be affiliated only with the A.F.T.

The United Teachers' affiliation with the federation which is part of the A.F.L.-C.I.O., had been a sore point with the N.E.A. leadership. The N.E.A. has vigorously opposed efforts to bring about any national merger that involved A.F.L.-C.I.O. ties. The N.E.A. has about 1.5 million members outside New York, while the A.F.T. has a total of 500,000, including its New York members.

Among those who argued against severing ties with the N.E.A. was Thomas J. Pisa of Buffalo, who told the assembly: "If you go ahead with this goodbye."

Mr. Pisa told newsmen later that he expected 99 percent of the 3,700 members of the Buffalo Federation of Teachers to leave the United Teachers over the disaffiliation issue.

But Dorothy Gutenkauf, a member of the State University faculty local, said that the N.E.A. had acted against the United Teachers and that the state organization had no choice but to fight to protect itself.

Earlier, Thomas Y. Hobart Jr., the president of the United Teachers, accused the N.E.A. of intruding into the state, hiring 35 of the state group's 306 staff members—by offering, he asserted, substantial pay increases—and establishing 11 offices throughout the state as part of a multimillion-dollar campaign to woo teachers here.

Sitting quietly on the dais during the debate was Albert Shanker, the executive vice president of the United Teachers. Mr. Shanker is also the president of the A.F.T. and its New York City local, the United Federation of Teachers as well as a vice president of the A.F.L.-C.I.O.

Some N.E.A. officials have been particularly critical of Mr. Shanker, whom they have accused of pushing merger for his own personal ambitions.

Cypriot Official Quits

ANKARA, Turkey, March 5 (Reuters)—The Cypriot Ambassador to Turkey, Ahmed Zaim, resigned today and closed down his embassy because of what he called the uncompromising attitude of President Makarios of Cyprus. Mr. Zaim is a Turkish Cypriot.

Weather Reports and Forecast

Summary

Except for some flurries across extreme northern and western New England today, it will be sunny and near seasonable throughout the Northeast. Flurries will fall in the central Appalachians, and from northern Michigan into northern Minnesota. Showers and thundershowers will be scattered in South Carolina, Georgia, northern Florida and southern Louisiana. It will be partly cloudy and colder elsewhere east of the Mississippi River, and also in the lower Mississippi Valley. Fair and warmer conditions will prevail from the Plains States to the Pacific Coast.

Hazy skies and warm temperatures covered the Eastern Seaboard yesterday, although a cold front moved in from the Appalachians and caused showers in the Metropolitan New York area late in the day. A band of showers was also reported from southwestern Pennsylvania through eastern and central Tennessee and the lower Mississippi Valley into southeastern Texas; a few thunderstorms were recorded in South Carolina, Georgia and southern Florida. Snow occurred in northern Michigan, northeastern Iowa and southeastern Wisconsin. Except for clouds over the Plains States, elsewhere skies were clear.

Cold front: a boundary between cold air and warmer air, under which the colder air pushes like a wedge, usually south and east.
Warm front: a boundary between warm air and a retreating wedge of colder air over which the warm air is forced as it advances, usually north and east.
Occluded front: a line along which warm air was lifted by opposing wedges of cold air, often causing precipitation.
Shaded areas indicate precipitation.
Dash lines show forecast afternoon maximum temperatures.
Isobars are lines (solid black) of equal barometric pressure (in inches), forming air-flow patterns.
Winds are counterclockwise toward the center of low-pressure systems, clockwise outward from high-pressure areas. Pressure systems usually move east.

PENSION TAX RISE SEEN LESS LIKELY

House Unit Leaves Door Open For Pay Above $16,500

By EDWIN L. DALE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 5—A House subcommittee supplied more evidence today that Congress would not raise the Social Security tax rate this year, as requested by President Ford.

However, the Social Security subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee left open the possibility of a small increase in the wage base on which the Social Security tax rate is computed. This would raise taxes only for the 15 percent of the labor force with earnings in 1977 above $16,500 a year, the currently-established wage base for 1977.

The subcommittee today was not voting on legislation, but rather was preparing a report by the Ways and Means Committee to the House Budget Committee on what might be done this year by way of revenue legislation.

Going through the same process last week, the Senate Finance Committee tentatively decided not to include any extra Social Security revenues.

The House subcommittee voted, 6 to 2, against raising the Social Security tax rate, now 5.85 percent on both employer and employee. The President has asked an increase to 6.15 percent.

The the panel voted, 8 to 4, to include in the report to the Budget Committee a possible increase in the wage base in 1977 from $16,500—which it will reach under the "escalation" provisions of present law —to $17,700. This would raise the tax on the better paid workers by $70.20 a year above the level of $963.25 that it will reach under present law next year. The maximum tax in 1976 will be $895.05.

The increase would raise about $1.9 billion in a full year of application. Even this amount would not be enough to cover the estimate gap between outgo and income of the Social Security system of about $4 billion this year.

The Social Security issue, together with other matters now goes to the full Ways and Means Committee. Actual legislative consideration of Social Security taxes, if any, would come later.

U.S. ASSAILS POLICY OF U.N. RIGHTS GROUP

GENEVA, March 5 — The United States accused the United Nations Commission on Human Rights today of "political ax-grinding on behalf of narrow partisan interests."

"It is a misnomer for this body to be called a Commission on Human Rights," said Leonard Garment, the United States representative on the 32-nation commission.

He spoke before the commission voted on a resolution that indirectly endorsed the equating of Zionism with racism by the General Assembly at its recent session.

The resolution, proposed by Cuba, Egypt, Jordan, Pakistan, Senegal, Tanzania and Yugoslavia, called for the "full and universal implementation" of all United Nations decisions and statements on "racism, racial discrimination, apartheid, decolonization and self-determination."

The resolution, presented in connection with the commission's discussion on plans for the so-called "United Nations Decade to Eliminate Racism and Racial Discrimination, was adopted in a show-of-hands vote, 19 to 8, with one abstention, and four delegations either absent or not voting.

Britain, France, West Germany, Italy, Austria, Canada, Uruguay and Panama voted against the resolution. Ecuador abstained.

Workers Union representative who can presumably draw on the resources of the union.

"It just happened; they asked me to run and I'm going to retire next year so maybe this is something I should do before I retire," said the stocky 62-year-old Mr. Morselli, who lives in Centerport, L.I., with his wife and grown son.

Mr. Morselli said yesterday that "in all probability" he would support Mr. Udall "if for no other reason than he is the liberal frontrunner." There is no Udall slate in his district, so the switch should be uncomplicated.

Bayh campaign leaders in the district, had recommended Mr. Morselli for an alternate delegate post, but they were overruled by a caucus of Bayh supporters who were obviously impressed by Mr. Morselli's impassioned recital of his long service in the Democratic Party and the labor movement.

"The Democratic Party doesn't owe me a damn thing; I owe the Democratic Party," Mr. Morselli said, citing the 40-hour week, Social Security and other social welfare programs.

Basis of Support

Why is he supporting Senator Bayh? "The heads of my union are leaning heavily toward him," he said in the quiet manner that contrasts with his high-pressure stump-speaking style.

His second choice? Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota. But Mr. Morselli emphasized that he believed that each delegate should go along with the majority of the district delegation in making another choice if Mr. Bayh faltered.

Senator Humphrey was also the second choice of a Jackson delegate candidate, Sandra L. Berg of Flushing, Queens, a first-grade teacher who is also active in the United Federation of Teachers. "Hubert Humphrey was there before the liberal label meant anything," said Miss Berg, who is in her mid-30's and has been working in political campaigns since she was 15.

"My commitment is to Jackson and a Democratic President," said Miss Berg, who is a member of the political club headed by Borough President Donald R. Manes of Queens, who is also the Queens Democratic leader. Mr. Manes and the Queens Democratic organization are supporting Senator Jackson. Mr. Manes said that Miss Berg had been selected because he had known her for 20 years and because he wanted to have at least one labor representative on each Congressional district slate.

Miss Berg agreed with that theory. "I want to be a delegate because I want labor's point of view to be put across," she said.

Miss Berg, who teaches at Public School 178 in Jamaica, Queens, is also the Queens political action coordinator for the union.

She said that she was supporting Mr. Jackson because "he was one of the first to speak out on Soviet Jewry, he is a staunch supporter of labor and his children go to Washington public schools, not to private schools."

A Carter Supporter

James Dupree, the 40-year-old chairman of the social sciences department at Onondaga Community College, said he was supporting Mr. Carter because, as a native Georgian, he had been following the career of the former Georgia Governor for some time.

Mr. Dupree, a Democratic committeeman in the middle-class, integrated 17th ward of Syracuse, said he admired Mr. Carter's stance as a new Governor, that "the old Southern way was gone." Mr. Dupree added that Mr. Carter "had a new Southern policy, one of the first to take a new attitude on the racial question."

Mr. Dupree also cited a magazine profile in The New York Times and a Carter speech at Syracuse University as spurs to write Mr. Carter's upstate campaign manager and offer his services to the campaign. "Those two things firmed up my decision that I would be willing to work for him," he said.

Long a Fan of Harris

Mr. Dupree, who is married and the father of two, was one of a minority of the seven delegate candidates who enthusiastically supported Senator McGovern in the 1972 Presidential campaign. As for his own political philosophy, he said, "I don't like to get into labels; I'm a historian."

He said he had no second choice. Governor Carey on the ticket? "He hasn't impressed me," said Mr. Dupree, echoing most of the other delegate candidates.

Like Mr. Dupree, Sister Patricia Dillon worked in the 1972 McGovern campaign, but is a longtime fan of Mr. Harris, whom she first met four years ago.

The 34-year-old nun is a member of the Religious of Jesus and Mary order and is a full-time tenant organizer in the Bronx working for the Northwest Bronx Community and Clergy Coalition. To avoid any conflict with her social work, she is running as a Harris delegate candidate in the adjacent 23d district.

A member of the liberal Benjamin Franklin Democratic Club in Riverdale, Pat Dillon, as she refers to herself, said she had been asked by John Klotz, a leader of the liberal New Democratic Coalition to run as a delegate candidate.

But first she consulted with the 19 nuns with whom she lives at St. John's Convent on West 23d Street, not far from her family home. "They have to put up with me when I'm never around and don't cook when I'm supposed to," she said.

Like Mr. Harris, she strongly supports Federal housing and food programs. She said that Senator Jackson was unacceptable to her as a candidate, because "I don't like his military stance; we should be spending money on housing and health needs, not guns." Governor Wallace is also unacceptable to her.

Uncommitted Candidate

Several degrees to the right of Sister Patricia, John Festino of Scotia, a Schenectady suburb, described himself as a moderate and said that none of the Democratic contenders, including Governor Wallace, was unacceptable to him. "Being a party member, I would have to support whoever gets the endorsement; I'm a strong believer in the organization," said Mr. Festino who is running as part of the Democratic organization's uncommitted slate in Albany and Schenectady Counties.

Mr. Festino, a 66-year-old retired business executive, unabashedly conceded that he had been campaigning for the delegate job since last summer. "I've never been to a national convention and before I call it quits in politics, I'd like to go to one," he said.

Mr. Festino had a lot of chits to call on. He has been a Democratic committeeman for 40 years, a onetime town leader and has been active in fraternal and Italian-American groups. Living at the same address for 43 years, he knows most people in the area by their first name. He and his wife Lena collected 40 signatures on designating petitions between them.

A Wallace Supporter

Issues? "I don't want to give away things that will keep raising taxes—take care of the needy but let others pay their fair share," Mr. Festino said.

Many degrees to the right of Mr. Festino, Margaret M. Sklenar is a Wallace delegate candidate in Staten Island and an obviously enthusiastic member of the John Birch Society, which she says has a thriving chapter on Staten Island.

The fiftyish Mrs. Sklenar owns and operates the Sleepy Hollow Inn in Pleasant Plains and has never been active in political campaigns. She has been a small contributor to Governor Wallace and was asked to be a delegate through a friend of a friend, reflecting the difficulty of Wallace campaign aides in recruiting delegates in many areas.

Why Wallace? "He's the only one running for president who would be near my philosophy." Her philosophy? "Freedom of choice is what I'm in favor of, freedom to be whatever you want to be; now you do what the government says."

Mrs. Sklenar, the mother of two married children and separated, is most voluble when, following the Birchist line, she talks of a Rockefeller-led conspiracy" to kill "constitutional government" in the United States and to promote a "one-world government."

She said that Governor Wallace was not a racist nor was she. "I have no objection to anyone buying a house next door to me . . . don't make me look like I'm a redneck from Alabama," she said.

Backer of Udall

Across New York harbor in the Silk Stocking district —and even further away ideologically — Richard T. Tibbetts is running in the 18th Congressional District as a Udall delegate candidate.

Although only 23, Mr. Tibbetts, an editor of a business newsletter and a Stuyvesant Town resident, has been involved in liberal Democratic campaigns since his undergraduate days at Yale. Yet he prefers to describe himself as a progressive rather than a liberal.

Mr. Tibbetts has been working in the Udall campaign here since last summer because he has followed the Congressman's career for many years. He was most impressed by the Udall challenge of the House leadership in 1969 and his anti-Vietnam war stance dating back to 1967.

A member of the Village Independent Democrats, the granddaddy of the liberal antiorganization movement in Manhattan, Mr. Tibbetts had surprisingly contrasting views on Senators Jackson and Humphrey.

He said he did not view Mr. Humphrey "as the great pariah of the party—I have a lot of respect for him." However, he said that Mr. Jackson was "a potential unacceptable" because of his identification with military spending and his "potential big play for the anti-busing vote."

Some Democrats view the Senators as two peas in a pod. But, the Democratic delegates despite their common pod, the Democratic Party, are hardly peas in a pod.

Up to 1,000 in the Race For 205 Delegate Posts

As many as 1,000 Democrats will be running for the 205 district delegate posts to be filled in the April 6 primary. Sixty-nine additional delegates will be selected by the Democratic State Committee and apportioned to each candidate on the basis of the primary returns.

The district delegates are running on slates of four to six delegates in each of the state's 39 Congressional districts. The number of delegates apportioned to a district depends on population and the Democratic vote in the district in the last two Presidential elections.

Delegate candidates qualified for the ballot by filing with local boards of elections petitions with the signatures of at least 1250 enrolled Democrats in the district.

Saigon, Hanoi and Haiphong To Be Vietnam Provinces

SAIGON, South Vietnam, March 5 (Agence France-Presse) —The administrative map for a reunified Vietnam consists of 38 provinces, of which three are cities—Hanoi, Saigon and Haiphong.

Before the old South Vietnamese Government was ousted, the South was divided into 44 provinces while the North had 23 provinces plus two cities, Hanoi and Haiphong.

Under the new system, the number of provinces in the South has been reduced to 20. Two of the South's former provinces, Quang Tri, just south of the 17th Parallel; and Thua Thien, which includes the former imperial capital of Hue, have been merged with the former northern province of Quang Binh.

Whooping Cranes Stir Hope

MONTE VISTA, Colo., March 5 (UPI) — Wildlife biologists hope that four young whooping cranes will form the nucleus of a new flock of the endangered birds. The birds, born in Idaho last summer, flew into a wildlife refuge near Monte Vista recently after spending the winter along the Rio Grande in central New Mexico.

JELL-O TEST FINDS LIFELIKE SIGNAL

Blob Gives Confusing Signs in Brain Wave Analysis

By BOYCE RENSBERGER

An Ontario neurologist made a brain wave analysis of a blob of lime Jell-o and obtained readings that he said could be mistaken as evidence of life.

The electroencephalogram, or EEG, experiment was made in the intensive care ward of a hospital, and the neurologist said the squiggly line it produced actually reflected stray electrical signals given off by nearby respirators, intravenous feeders and human activity.

The neurologist said that similar electrical artifacts interfering with a real EEG test could confuse doctors into believing that a person's brain was still living when, in fact, it might be as lifeless as the Jell-o.

Definition of Death

The experiment was conducted by Dr. Adrian R. M. Upton, associate professor of medicine (neurology) at McMaster University in Hamilton, Ontario. He described his experiment at a medical meeting in San Francisco. Details and a reproduction of the EEG readout were published in the March 3 issue of Medical Tribune, a newspaper circulated to doctors.

To make the experiment Dr. Upton used a hemisphere of Jell-o molded in a bowl and turned out on a dish. He placed EEG electrodes on the gelatin in positions corre[sponding to] the conventional s[...] the scalp of actual [...]

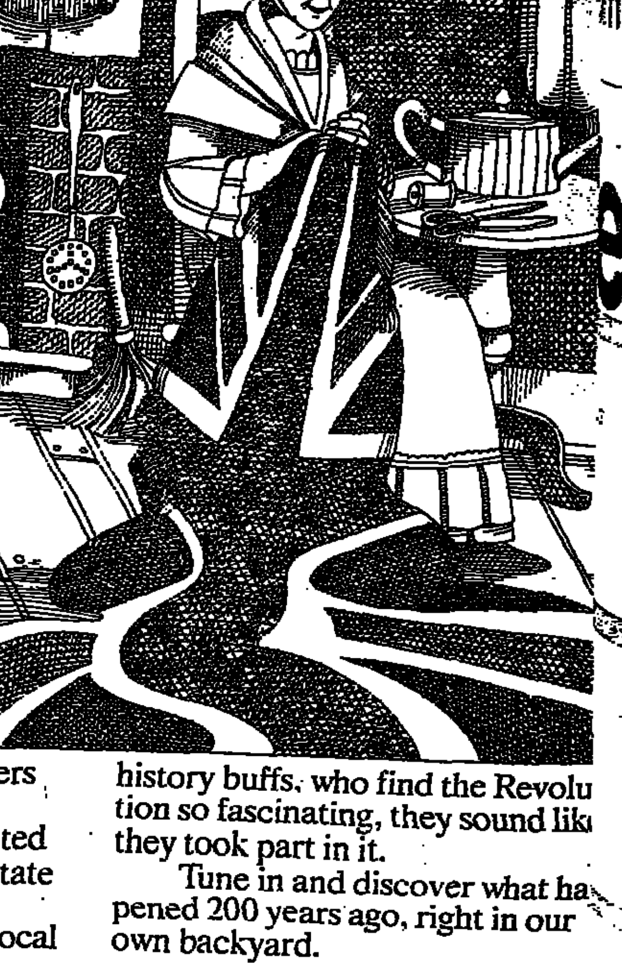
TONIGHT SEE WHY AMERICANS MIGHT STILL BE COLONIALS IF IT WEREN'T FOR THE PEOPLE OF NEW YOR[K]



No state played a more important role in America's War of Independence than New York State. Yet somewhere along the road from Boston to Valley Forge, our ancestors' contribution has been forgotten.

Few people know that the first major victory for the Americans occurred in upper New York.

Or that without New York's economic support of the colonies, the war would be celebrated as a British victory.

Or that one-third of all battles took place on New York soil.

That's why, starting tonight, New York's contribution to the American Revolution will be explored in the Channel 13 4-part series, "Paths of Rebellion: New York in the Revolution." Made possible by an underwriting grant from Manufacturers Hanover.

Each program will be devoted to a single region of New York State and narrated by descendants of Revolutionary War figures and local history buffs, who find the Revolution so fascinating, they sound lik[e] they took part in it.

Tune in and discover what ha[p]pened 200 years ago, right in our own backyard.

NBC's logo was composed by a New York design firm, while NETV's was drawn by an artist on the staff of the educational station. NBC has not disclosed the cost of designing and implementing its logo, but published reports put it at $750,000. NETV said its logo cost less than $100.

Shows by Comedians Planned on Cable TV

Home Box Office Inc. has videotaped a performance by the comedian David Steinberg at the Playboy Club as the first in a series of 12 comedy hours that the pay-TV concern is producing for the 115 cable television systems around the country that carry its fare.

The series, called "On Location," will present comedians such as Rodney Dangerfield, Myron Cohen and Freddie Prinze, performing their acts before paying audiences at nightclubs in New York, Las Vegas, Toronto and Los Angeles.

Home Box Office claims 300,000 subscribers. In Manhattan, Teleprompter and Manhattan Cable TV offer the pay channel for an additional $10 a month above the monthly $10 cable charge. The programs are broadcast without commercials.

There will be no editing of language or political references, said Harlan Kleiman, a vice president of Home Box Office.

"We don't have to worry about a commercial break," Mr. Kleiman said. "We are taking the audience to an event."

CBS Re-establishes Investigative Unit

The CBS News investigative reporting unit, which was all but dissolved last year when its producer, Stanhope Gould, left to join NBC News, has been re-established with a nucleus of three persons who will be based in Washington.

Assigned to the unit are Bob Schakne and Marty Plissner, reporters, and Joel Blocker, producer.

Richard S. Salant, president of CBS News, said the unit would make occasional use of other reporters. The new unit *has been established in Wash*ington rather than in New York, the base for the previous group, because "there is more investigative work to be done from there," Mr. Salant said.

Mr. Gould left CBS News after the telecast of his investigative documentary on the CBS Records scandal. Reportedly, he had been displeased with its final editing.

TV Auction to Aid 7 Arts Institutions In Brooklyn Tonight

Television viewers will be able to bid tonight for such things as honorary ownership of the Brooklyn Bridge for a day, an organically homegrown luncheon for two in Stewart Mott's penthouse garden, a party for 30 on an antique Chinese junk or their own wedding ceremony at the Cloisters.

The auction will benefit seven of Brooklyn's cultural institutions—the Brooklyn Academy of Music, Brooklyn Arts and Cultural Association, the Brooklyn Children's Museum, Brooklyn Philharmonia, Brooklyn Public Library, Long Island University's Triangle Theater and the Brooklyn Museum. The five-hour sale called "Lights! Camera! Auction! will be held from 10 P.M. today to 3 A.M. tomorrow on WNEW (Channel 5) and WXTV (Channel 41).

More than 500 items are to be auctioned during the sale, which will emanate from the NBC-TV color studios in Brooklyn, in the hope of raising at least $1 million.

Such well-known auctioneers will participate as John Marion, president of Sotheby Parke Bernet; Bob Segmond, known as Mr. Auction, and Regina Hayes.

JERSEY SENATORS ASSAIL F.C.C. TV STEP

WASHINGTON, March 5 (UPI) —A decision by the Federal Communication Commission to seek further comment on how to improve television coverage of New Jersey is little more than "continued stalling," according to both New Jersey Senators.

"This whole process could take another year and amounts to little more than continued stalling in resolving what is a clearly inequitable situation," Senators Harrison A. Williams Jr., a Democrat, and Clifford P. Case, a Republican, said in a joint statement yesterday.

The F.C.C., which promised to move swiftly in settling the problem of television coverage, yesterday rejected proposals to assign a new VHF television station to New Jersey or transfer one from New York City.

New Jersey, which has three UHF television stations, and Delaware are the only states in the nation without a locally based VHF station.

In February 1974, the New Jersey Coalition for Fair Broadcasting, of which Senators Case and Williams are members, petitioned the F.C.C. to require network stations in New York and Philadelphia to provide increased coverage of news and cultural events in New Jersey, and asked that the state be assigned its own television channel.

3 WHITES INDICTED IN '57 BLACK DEATH

Special to The New York Times

MONTGOMERY, Ala., March 5—Three white men, identified by a colleague as one-time members of the Ku Klux Klan, were indicted by a grand jury today on a charge of first degree murder in connection with the drowning death of a young black man 19 years ago.

The three men, each free under $25,000 bail, are William Kyle Livingston, 38 years old; Henry Alexander, 46, and James York, 73. Their trials are tentatively scheduled to begin in early May.

The principal state witness against the three was Raymond C. Britt Jr., 44, who identified himself as a former klansman.

At a preliminary hearing last week, Mr. Britt testified that he and the three men abducted Willie Edwards Jr., 25, a black grocery truck driver, and forced him at gunpoint to jump from a high bridge into the Alabama River on Jan. 22, 1957. Mr. Edwards's body was found four months later, some 20 miles downstream from the bridge.

The three men, through their attorneys, entered pleas of not guilty to the charge.

Connecticut's Bond Rating Reduced 2d Time in Year

By MICHAEL KNIGHT
Special to The New York Times

HARTFORD, March 5—Moody's Investors Service has reduced Connecticut's bond credit rating from AA to A-1, the second such reduction in a year, Gov. Ella T. Grasso announced here today.

She called the move by one of the nation's two leading bond-rating services an "unwarranted overreaction to the continuing fiscal difficulties in New York State" and a "cruel blow to Connecticut's efforts to put our fiscal house in order."

State finance officials said it was too early to predict how much more the state would now have to pay in interest to keep its bonds attractive to investors. Some of the gloomier officials speculated that the state might now have difficulty in selling its bonds at any rate.

Standard & Poor's, the other major bond-rating service, had joined with Moody's late last year in reducing the state's rating from AAA to AA. It has not, however, announced any change in its AA rating.

Governor Grasso, who is planning along with other state officials to visit several New York bond houses next week in connection with the offering of $100 million in state bonds, said the ratings did not reflect the state's true current financial situation.

Priorities Set Up

"In the past year Connecticut has done everything in its power to control spending by state government," she said in a statement. "My administration is setting priorities for future capital construction to assure that the state proceeds only with those projects that are essential and within the state's financial means."

The state had been projecting an $80 million budget deficit for the fiscal year ending on June 30, but economies and a reaccounting of the figures have reduced that projected deficit by half.

No one at Moody's could be reached for comment today on today's bond downgrading.

Connecticut sold $100 million in bonds last June at 5.63 percent interest, according to the State Treasurer, Henry Parker. After its rating was dropped to AA, $100 million more in bonds were sold at 6.16 percent, an increase in interest rates that will cost $4 million over the 20-year life of the issue.

Mr. Parker said he was unable to predict what rate the bonds would be sold at this time, but he added that he felt optimistic that it would not increase by much.

"This rating is too low for us," he said. "I believe people are going to say Connecticut is a strong credit risk and there is every reason to believe it is. So my judgment is that the buyers will make up their own minds and we'll get a good rate."

Mr. Parker said that despite "our past fiscal sins" the state was in excellent financial health and owed only $2.2 billion, half its legal maximum debt. In addition, he added, "the Governor has grabbed the reins of the state's budget and put a clamp on it, raising taxes, laying off 500 workers and improving the cash flow with monthly sales tax collections."

He blamed the rate change almost entirely on the fiscal problems that plague neighboring New York and Massachusetts.

"Nothing has changed in Connecticut," he said. "What's changed is that there's a cloud over New York and we are shaded by it. That is to say, there is still apprehension in the municipal marketplace and it makes the rating agencies supersensitive in their judgments. I think a number of states are going to receive similar scrutiny for no fault of their own."

Jay Tepper, the state's Commissioner of Finance and Control, said state offiicals had met with Moody's personnel yesterday and had presented their arguments.

"I think their decision was made before we met and their minds were decided in advance," he said.

"With Connecticut being the wealthiest state in the Union per capita, there is less likelihood of Connecticut defaulting than of any other state in the Union and of any corporate entity in the country. And there is sufficient untapped wealth here to take care of any problems that might arise. New York frightened them, and that's the only explanation I can think of."

City's Outlook Viewed as Good For a Place to Run a Business

By MICHAEL STERNE

Cities, basically, are places to exchange information, goods and services, and New York still provides richer opportunities for these exchanges than any other city, Prof. Eli Ginzberg of Columbia University said yesterday in an assessment of New York's economic future for leading business and public officials.

Speaking at a breakfast meeting of the Association for a Better New York in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, Dr. Ginzberg also asserted that the city was becoming more competitive in some of the costs of doing business. Citing drops in rents for office space and a slowing of the rise of living costs below the national rate of increase, he said these trends would, in time, help New York

But the higher energy and tax costs for business probably will not come down, he said, and must be counted among the city's continuing disadvantages.

"The thing to remember," he said, "is that New York always has cost more, that it never has been cost competitive, and yet it has had enough other advantages that business has wanted to be here. What we have to do is build on these advantages."

Monetary Role Cited

Pointing out that New York had replaced London as the money capital of the world and that its strength as a center of finance apparently was growing, he suggested that public and private leaders ought to be exploring ways to improve communications and other things that might help the banks and investment houses to grow even faster.

Dr. Ginzberg also said that "it is no accident" that most of the big corporations that had moved their headquarters out of the city in recent years had resettled nearby. They still need what New York provides in great abundance, such "advanced services" as legal advice, accounting and communications, he said.

Dr. Ginzberg, who is head of Columbia's Conservation of Human Resources Project spoke against a background of continuing job losses and high employment in the city. On Tuesday, the State Labor Department reported that the unemployment rate here rose to 12.2 percent in January, a new high for the post-World War II period, and that the number of jobs in the city had fallen to the lowest level for a January since 1950.

Proposals Published

With the help of a grant from the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, Dr. Ginzberg and his colleagues recently published "An Economic Development Agenda for New York City," which proposed, among other things, a better coordination of the city's huge investment in education with the needs of its economy.

The city's huge and varied labor force, the equal of Sweden's in size, Dr. Ginzberg told association members, is still its greatest strength. This explains, he said, why such companies as McGraw-Hill and Pfizer, after considering relocation, decided to remain here, and why so many foreign companies continue to settle here.

Among recent positive developments that show "that New York need not go under," he said, are the growing involvement of businessmen in the city's affairs, the cooperation of the municipal employee unions in measures to ease the fiscal crisis and the fact that Federal and state authorities, after an initial reluctance to help the city, finally did come to its aid.

5 Nations in Sea Exercise

SAN DIEGO, March 5 (Reuters)—Britain, Australia and New Zealand have joined the United States and Canada in naval exercises that the United States Navy says are the biggest to be held off Southern California in more than a decade. They involve 41 ships, 200 jet fighter planes and 18,000 men and are scheduled to continue for another week.
